It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

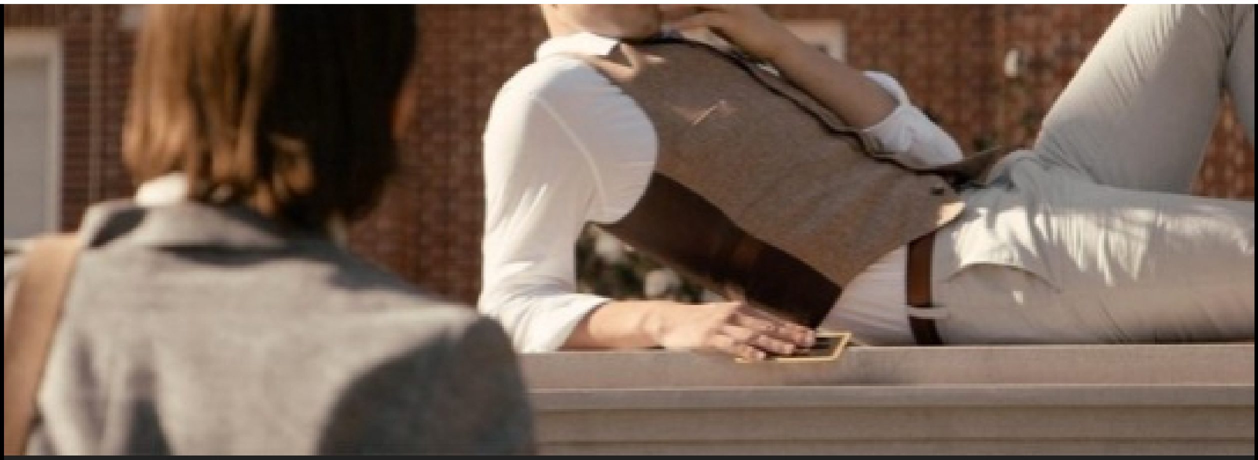
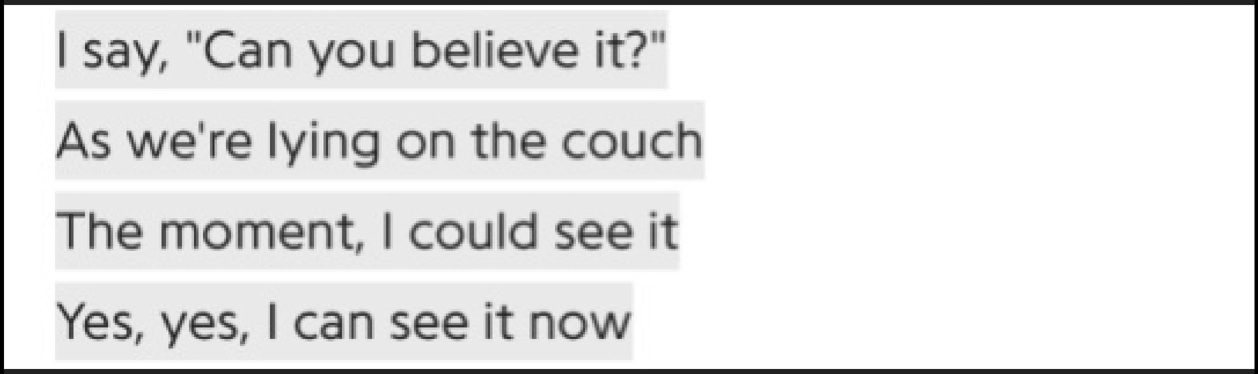
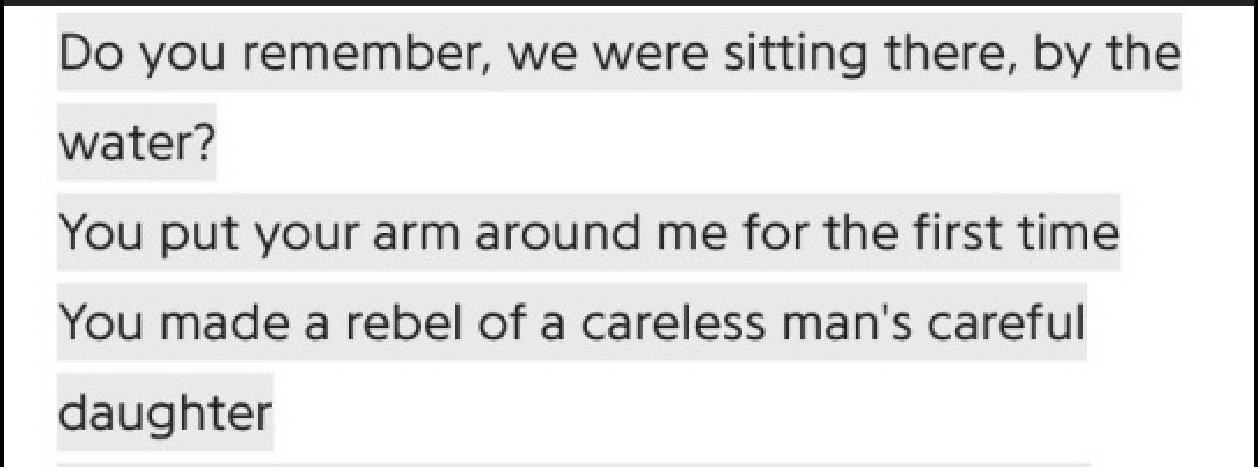
You were in college, working part-time, waiting tables
Left a small town and never looked back
I was a flight risk, with a fear of falling
Wondering why we bother with love, if it never lasts

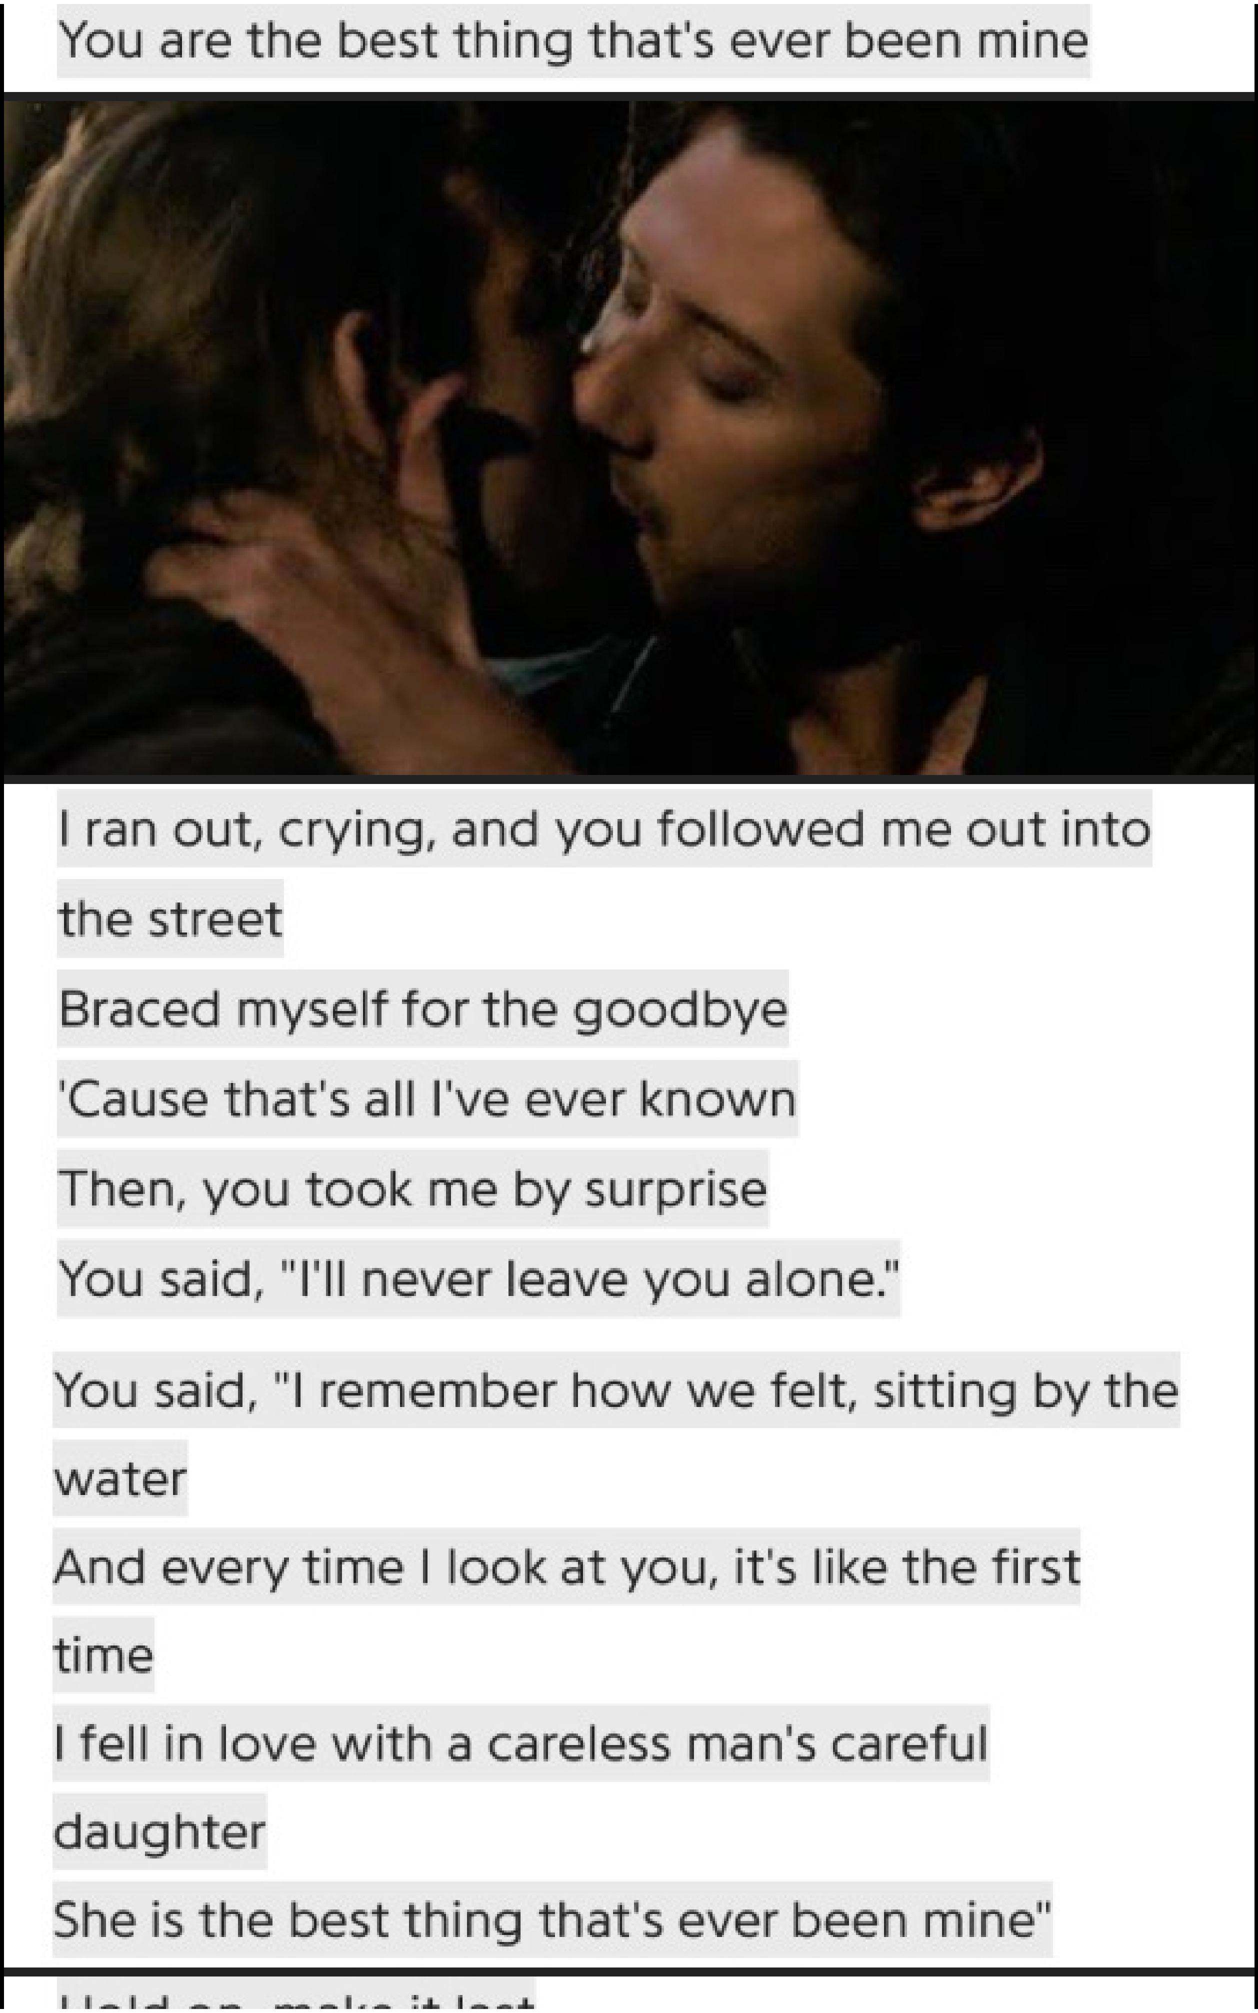




I say, "Can you believe it?"
As we're lying on the couch
The moment, I could see it
Yes, yes, I can see it now



Do you remember, we were sitting there, by the water?
You put your arm around me for the first time
You made a rebel of a careless man's careful daughter

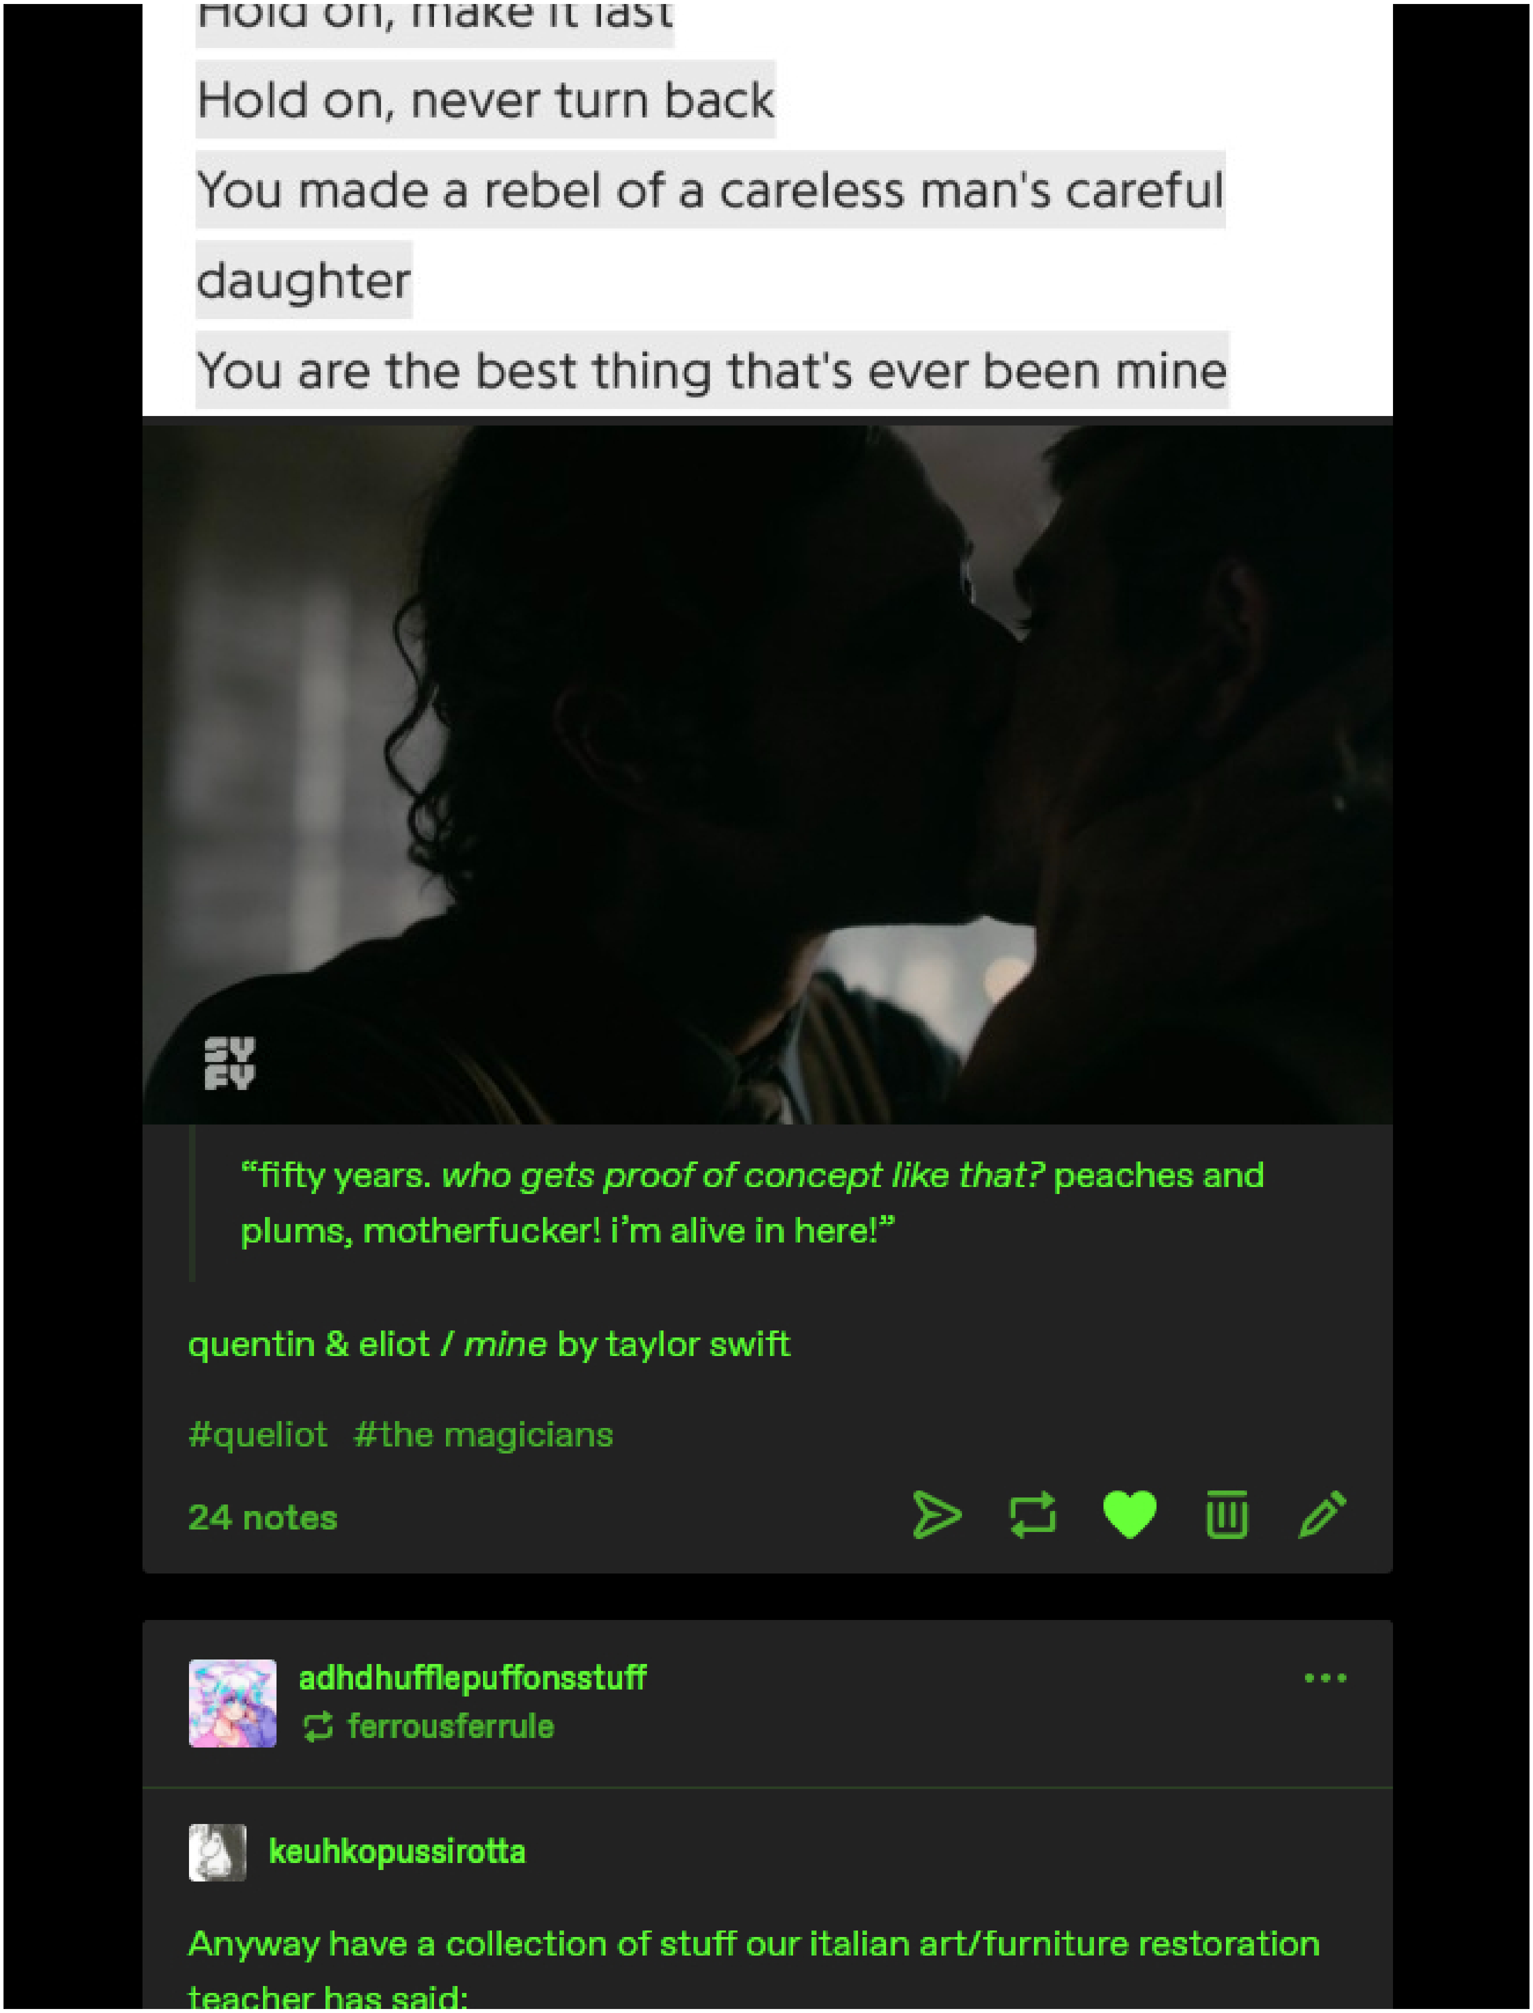


You are the best thing that's ever been mine

I ran out, crying, and you followed me out into the street
Braced myself for the goodbye
'Cause that's all I've ever known
Then, you took me by surprise
You said, "I'll never leave you alone."

You said, "I remember how we felt, sitting by the water
And every time I look at you, it's like the first time
I fell in love with a careless man's careful daughter
She is the best thing that's ever been mine"

Hold on, make it last



Hold on, make it last
Hold on, never turn back
You made a rebel of a careless man's careful daughter
You are the best thing that's ever been mine

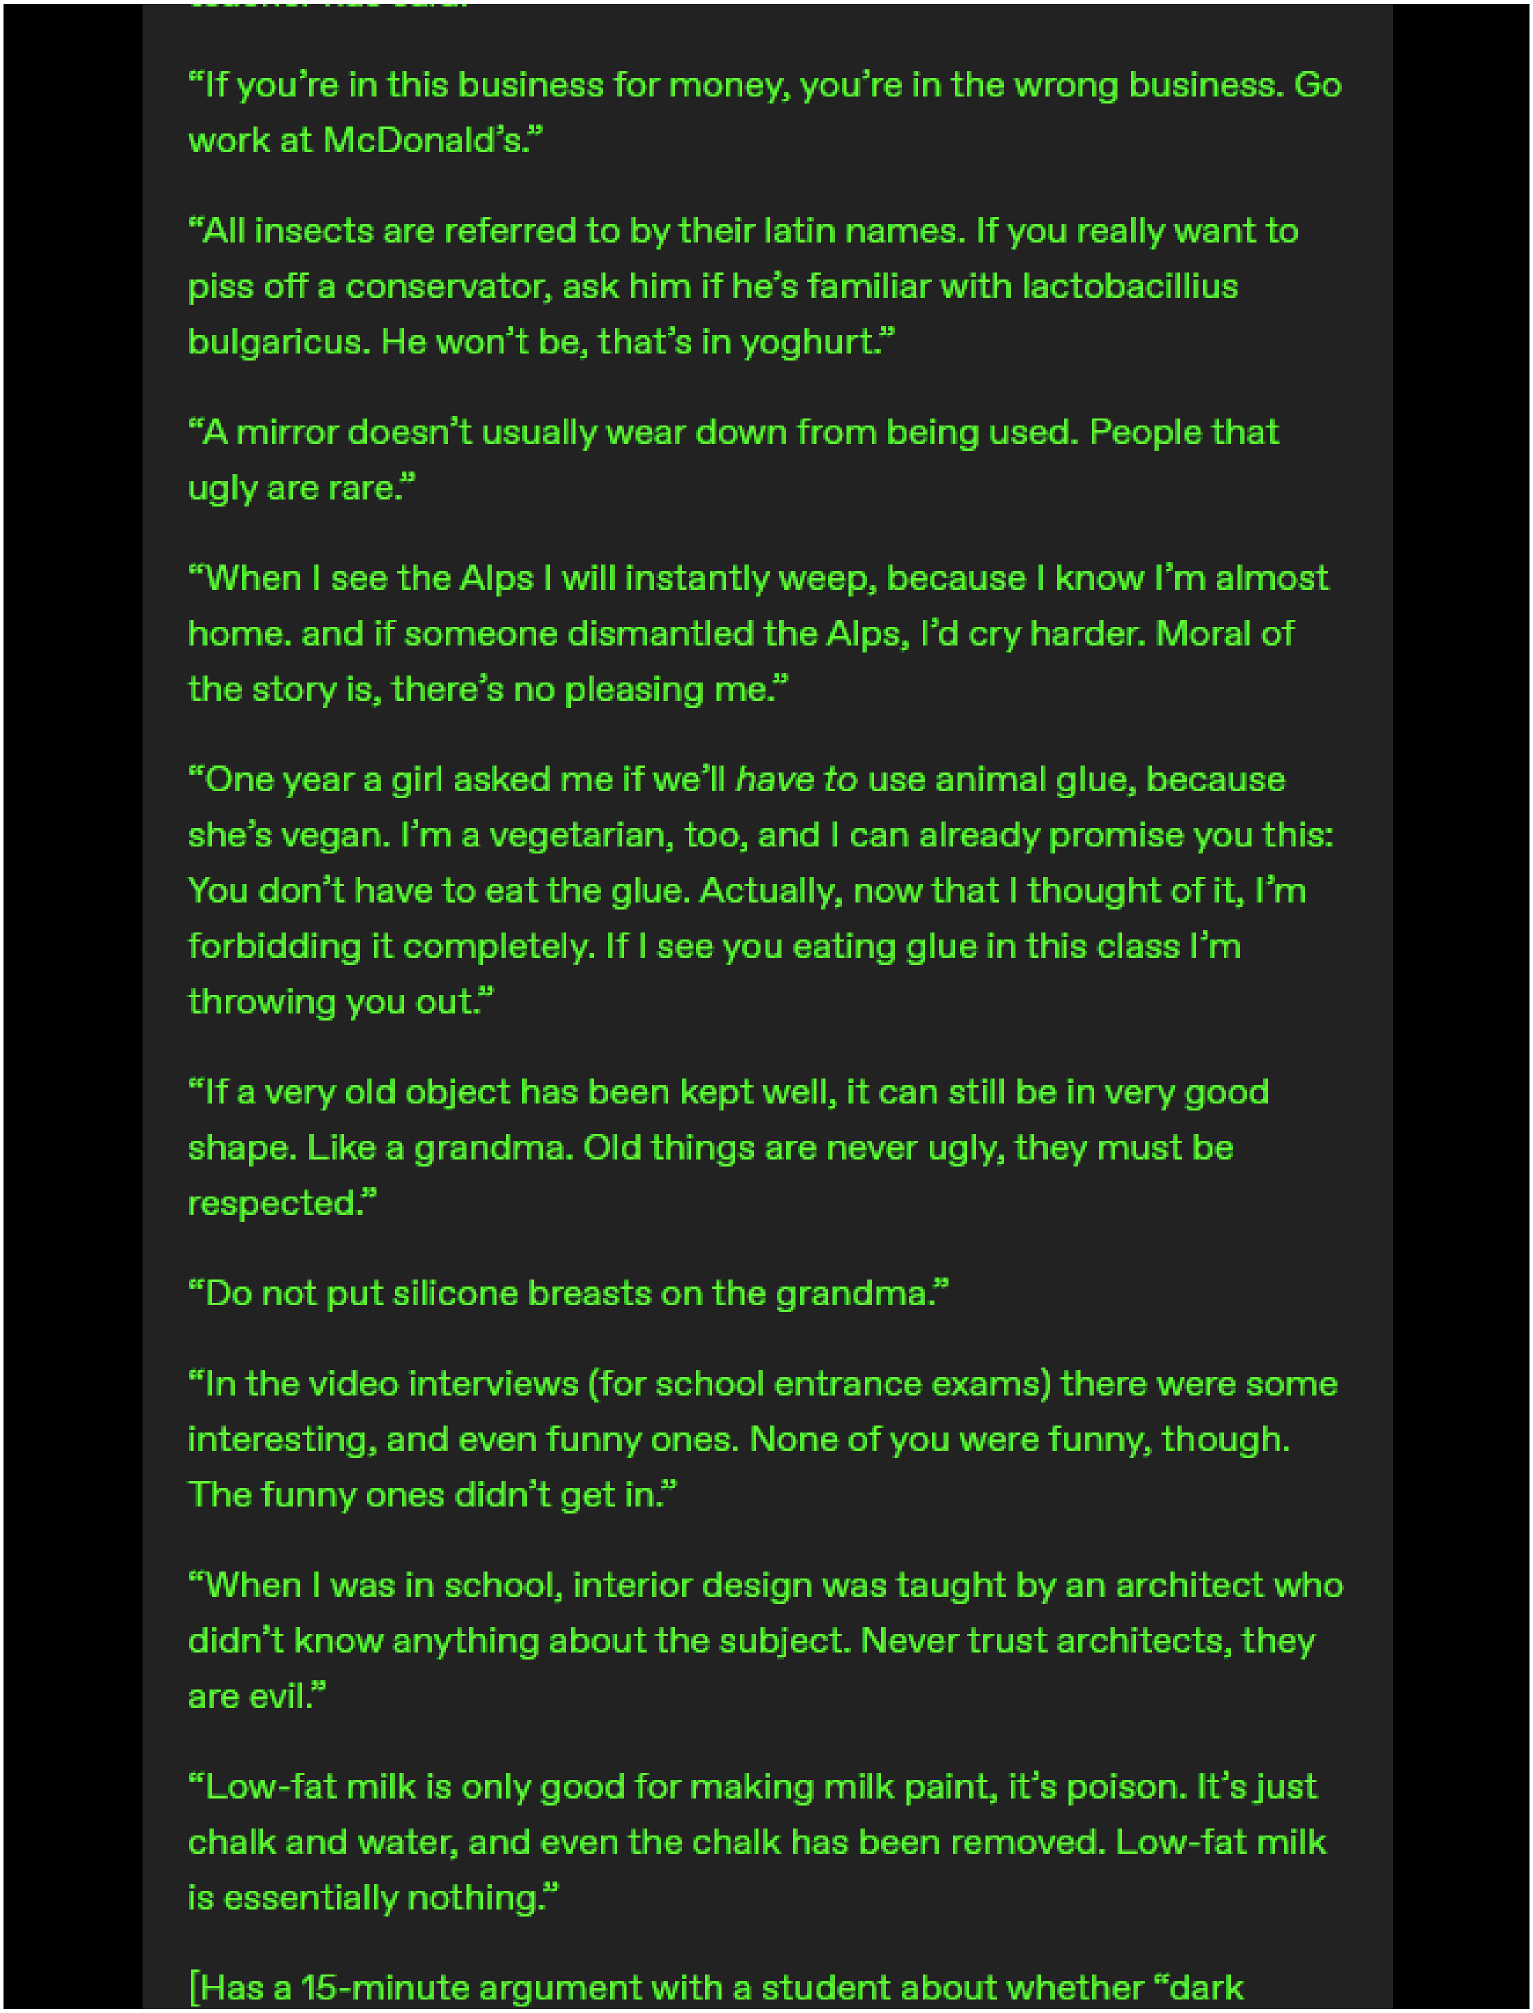
Anyway have a collection of stuff our italian art/furniture restoration teacher has said:



“If you’re in this business for money, you’re in the wrong business. Go work at McDonald’s.”

“All insects are referred to by their latin names. If you really want to piss off a conservator, ask him if he’s familiar with lactobacillius bulgaricus. He won’t be, that’s in yoghurt.”

“A mirror doesn’t usually wear down from being used. People that ugly are rare.”

“When I see the Alps I will instantly weep, because I know I’m almost home. and if someone dismantled the Alps, I’d cry harder. Moral of the story is, there’s no pleasing me.”

“One year a girl asked me if we’ll have to use animal glue, because she’s vegan. I’m a vegetarian, too, and I can already promise you this: You don’t have to eat the glue. Actually, now that I thought of it, I’m forbidding it completely. If I see you eating glue in this class I’m throwing you out.”

“If a very old object has been kept well, it can still be in very good shape. Like a grandma. Old things are never ugly, they must be respected.”

“Do not put silicone breasts on the grandma.”

“In the video interviews (for school entrance exams) there were some interesting, and even funny ones. None of you were funny, though. The funny ones didn’t get in.”

“When I was in school, interior design was taught by an architect who didn’t know anything about the subject. Never trust architects, they are evil.”

“Low-fat milk is only good for making milk paint, it’s poison. It’s just chalk and water, and even the chalk has been removed. Low-fat milk is essentially nothing.”

[Has a 15-minute argument with a student about whether “dark blonde” is a real hair colour]

“Fresco also means ‘I am in prison’ in italian, because it’s a bit cool. Or was, nowadays I think prisons are quite comfortable.”

“Ideally we’d use pure 100% ethanol, but we’re not allowed to get that anymore because we’re in Finland. They don’t even sell pure ethanol to doctors or hospitals, because medical students kept stealing and drinking it.”

“The man was - what was his name? Hefner. No, Defner, Hefner was the american. Apparently my brain rotates around playboy-magazines today.”

“This may be the only example of this kind of object in Kymenlaakso. Do not drop it, I might suddenly become very violent if something happens to it.”

“I have a jar of shellac in my old workshop in Italy. Haven’t been able to open it for 25 years. Every year, I try again.”

“If you can’t have a baby and don’t want to break into a maternity ward to steal hair, goat hair brushes are almost as good. But baby hair would be the best, it’s not like they use them for anything.”

“The best vodka is made out of potatoes, not wheat. Remember that. Polish potato vodka.”

“Let’s have a coffee break. Fifteen. I mean fifteen minutes, do not have fifteen coffees.”

He’s notorious for never actually booking a class, but just having his classes wherever he wants and whenever he wants, and acting insulted when he and his students are shooed out. One morning when he was having a class in the room that our teacher of the day had booked for the day, Diego left first with all his students following him in such a neat row, that he started sarcastically muttering some prayer or religious litany in either italian or latin as he went.

I think the funniest answer is that weed is completely illegal in Gotham due to the influence of various drug lords, and yet Harleen Quinzel somehow manages to have a completely legitimate business selling it without getting in trouble with the law, and no one can figure out how.

I don't want to reblog someone else's personal, but adding on to some dash convo about straight men and housework, this is exactly it with J. He cleans his own apartment. He will unload the dishwasher if he notices it's done running. He washes his own laundry. Are there chores he sucks at? Yes. But in general, he takes care of what needs doing without being asked.

Smash cut to the last guy I lived with, who would neither cook nor clean when I was working full time and paying 100% of the bills and he was unemployed and fucking up my netflix recommendations all day.

Anyway, the short of it if there are any younger ladies out there who get this far is this: do not seriously date a guy who lives in a way you find disgusting (some differences in standards are normal, but when it's clear he's not responsible for his own life, he's incapable of being partner material). And for the love of christ, if you're living with a guy who doesn't pull his own weight, do not marry him or have his kids unless/until he gets it together. If you let him get away with it, it will keep happening.

Another post to anyone who is prolife. Making abortions illegal or even criminalizing then won't stop people from having abortions, they'll just do it in a much more dangerous way, better to have it offered safely than to have people dying over a clump of cells. Once again, I am adopted and I am saying if you cannot be a good parent to a child and you want an abortion do it. I am adopted and I can say that putting a child up for adoption shouldn't be the advice you tell someone who wants the abortion. The system is overcrowded as it is and not enough people are adopting. Adding more people into the system will only grow the amount of people that feel unwanted. I got lucky and got adopted by wonderful people and I still feel unloved most of the time. I've never known someone who is adopted and doesnt feel out of place most everywhere they go. So « just put it up for adoption » isn't a very good argument. Plus giving birth leaves incredible trauma on the human body. Abortions should be legal and accessible for people of all economic classes, all races and all sexualities. According to https://www.who.int/news-room/fact-sheets/detail/preventing-unsafe-abortion Each year between 4.7% – 13.2% of maternal deaths can be attributed to unsafe abortion which is a completely avoidable tragedy! I will never believe that abortions should be illegal because it would save lives.

Everyone aware of him mocked and derided him as a cheating, greedy corporate asshole and mindless bully and this is by far not the only time anyone clocked his ass but it is probably one of the only times it got caught on video.

Hatred of him was bipartisan all my life and it just goes to show how easily right wingers can be suckered by anyone who kisses their collective asshole on their pet agendas.

Never forget that the reason Trump seems like an over-the-top stupidly villainous antagonist from a 90s movie is because half of them were based on Trump and making fun of him.

The reason The Simpsons and a handful of other comedies ‘predicted’ the Trump presidency was because he kept saying he wanted to run and nobody could think of anything funnier than a President Trump.

Nevada bill would allow tech companies to create governments yesterday

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Planned legislation to establish new business areas in Nevada would allow technology companies to effectively form separate local governments.

Democratic Gov. Steve Sisolak announced a plan to launch so-called Innovation Zones in Nevada to jumpstart the state's economy by attracting technology firms, Las Vegas Review-Journal reported Wednesday.

The zones would permit companies with large areas of land to form governments carrying the same authority as counties, including the ability to impose taxes, form school districts and courts and provide government services.

Why are company towns Bad?

Without external competition, housing costs and groceries in company towns could become exorbitant, and the workers built up large debts that they were required to pay off before leaving. ... In the South, free laborers and convict laborers were often housed in the same spaces, and suffered equally terrible mistreatment.

Non-black allies be like "listen to black voices, follow black leadership, black people are the important ones in all this!" But when black people make posts saying "black trans lives matter" and "black asexual lives matter" and any other minority suddenly its "uhh doesn't that go without saying? Black is black it doesn't matter if ur gay/trans/disabled/etc all black lives matter :/"

Idk how to tell you this, but you can't support black lives while being transphobic/ableist. And you can't be anti-racist while refusing to acknowledge how anti-blackness uniquely impacts the way we experience bigotry. Im black and asexual so it super pisses me off when non-black people take a post that says "black asexual lives matter" and try to use it as a Woke way of being a shithead to aces. They act like asexuals face zero social stigma and that the annoying asexies are just piggybacking off of the Blacks. Have you heard of uhhh hypersexualization? Have you thought about how black asexuals have a completely different experience than white asexuals do because of it? Have you thought about how black trans men do NOT face the same phenomenon of infantalization that white trans men do, as black men are often perceived as aggressive predators?

Why do we have to specify that trans black lives matter, asexual black lives matter, neurodivergent black lives matter, instead of saying "all black lives matter" and being done with it? Some of you really sound like those "but why do you have to bring [minority] into this :/" bitches. Intersectionality matters. Listen to black people.

prismatic-bell

Is it okay to point out the EARLY sexualization of Black girls (I’ve heard stories of Black girls as young as ten being arrested for “prostitution” because they....were wearing shorts while Black, I guess?), and how while this is damaging to all Black girls who aren’t allowed to just be fucking children past the age of five, it has a particularly harsh impact on Black asexual girls who don’t even hit puberty before being considered sexually available? They have no chance to process that they may not be straight before the whole world reduces them to T&A.

i just wanna say that i actually genuinely profoundly love every other trans person in a way that is so different from any other bond i've ever had. like, one of my mom's friends just had his daughter come out as trans and i don't know anything about her but her name and that she's a few years older than me and i think about her every single day and wish for good things to happen to her. my mom told me she got a really good job this week and i cried because i was so happy to hear she was doing well. one of my old roommates was a trans man and he taught me how to do my t shots and bought me shaving cream and nice straight razors when i started needing to shave my face and i still think of him every time it's shot day. there's a young trans guy who i went to high school with and we never really talked but if he ever needed anything i'd be there in a second. i see him around town sometimes and like literally we are always so happy to bump into each other even though we've never hung out even once. my regular server at this restaurant i went to every week was trans and he teased me about how boring my order always was and complimented me on my jackets and like for a solid year i looked forward to mondays because i knew i was going to see him. like i literally love trans people so much i love us so much. for all the transphobia and dysphoria and stupid infighting and bullshit we put up with we are so strong and so beautiful and like honest to god actually magical and i love us so so much.

some things we should start romanticising

- bike rides, especially when listening to music. the wind in your hair, the songs in your ears, every sound being quiet and living in your own bubble of lyrics. (edit: in some countries this is illegal and it can be dangerous - i had not thought of that and i apologise)
- sitting in a bus. you're going back home, maybe you're reading a book or just looking outside of the foggy glass.
- making tea. warming up the water, bringing it to a simmer and closing the gas, pouring it into a ceramic mug, the perfume of tea leaves: it's a ritual.
- buying a new book. walking in a book store, reading the first page of a book that sounds interesting, choosing a book because of its cover, never having heard of that book.
- reading the last page of a book. that one doctor who episode where the doctor says he rips the last page of each book he reads, reading the last line and feeling like all the air in your lungs is gone.
- that one specific moment when you are coming back from a party and you're walking the few last steps before getting home.
- writing your name on a new notebook. scribbling messy letters or trying hard to make it look pretty.
- tying shoe laces. where are you even going?
- picking a flower. getting off the road and into a patch of grass just to pick a yellow wild flower, pressing it in a book, or putting it in a glass of water.

- finally getting to bed. the cold bedsheets, closing your burning eyes, the small sounds of the city.

Storytime.

I work in radio, placing commercials.

(I'm so sorry.)

The good news: I have learned how to weaponize this for the forces of good.

The biggest thorn in my side on my station is that our corporate overlord has decided we have to play Ben Fucking Shapiro's syndicate show. I get calls every day from locals who hate this, but it's out of my hands in spite of my best efforts (believe me, I risked my job by collecting a list of angry callers names and taking to the program director as proof to drop BS, but no dice).

I also get angry calls about certain incredibly annoying commercials.

My solution is to combine these things. Now if you tune in to BS, you also get to hear that Tide commercial that sounds like mosquitoes, or the Snickers one that's straight up wordless screaming, or the local hot tub store with the running water sound in the background that makes people have to pee.

I call it Evil ASMR.

There are a few outcomes to this:

1. Nothing happens except I get petty revenge in punishing BS listeners

2. The advertisers are bothered that their stuff is getting played next to that poisonous bastard, and they pull out which is frankly the only way we will ever cancel the syndicate

3. Sh*piro gets bothered that only shitty commercials are playing on his show and HE pulls out (unlikely but I can dream)

4. The listeners get annoyed enough to turn it off, which is healthy for them and also means we will drop a syndicate that is extremely heinous.

Moral of the story is, the free market built this playground and I am the gleeful yard teacher that is making them all play on it together.

Chinese New Year! 新年快乐!

please note that the information below isn't celebrated by everyone in the same way. Some customs are more common in northern China rather than southern China and vice-versa.*

How to wish someone a Happy Chinese New Year:

1. 新年快乐！ Xīnnián kuàilè! - Happy New Year! (This can be used one the first day of the lunar calendar as well as the Gregorian calendar).

2. 新春快乐！ Xīnchūn kuàilè! - Happy Spring Festival!

3. 新年好！ Xīnnián hǎo! - Hello! (This is how you greet people during Chinese New Year).

When greeting or wishing someone a Happy Chinese New Year, many Chinese people wish their family and friends things like: “I hope you have a happy and healthy family,” “I hope you get a job promotion,” “I hope you have good fortune and pockets overflowing with gold.” Here are some examples:

4. 恭喜发财！ Gōngxǐ fācái! - Wish you a successful and prosperous year! (This saying is known well because of this Chinese New Year song you can watch here).

5. 阖家幸福! Hé jiā xìngfú - Wish you a happy family!

6. 事业有成! Shìyè yǒu chéng - Hope you have a successful career!

You can watch this YouTube video or read this article to learn more about how to wish someone a Happy Chinese New Year!

What is Chinese New Year?

Chinese New Year, also known as lunar new year or the spring festival, celebrates the first day of the new year on the lunar calendar. In 2021, this holiday falls on Friday, February 12! This holiday is the most important holiday to those who celebrate this - its importance can be comparable to how Americans celebrate Christmas.

People have been celebrating Chinese New Year for about 3,500 - 3,900 years. It's exact origins are unknown, but this tradition is believed to have started in the Shang Dynasty (1600-1049 BC) when people would make sacrifices to the gods and their ancestors towards the end of a year. However, the tradition was recorded and official during the Han Dynasty (202 BC - 220 AD) when Emperor Wu began using the lunar calendar. He chose to follow this calendar because it would let him know when second new moon after the winter solstice was.

Now, many Southeast Asian countries and people besides the Chinese celebrate Chinese New Year such as: Koreans, Vietnamese, Tibetans, etc. However, it is common to not see Japan celebrate Chinese New Year.

Why do I keep hearing about the Year of the Ox/Cow?

Just like in western culture, there are zodiacs in eastern culture that the Chinese follow. There are 12 zodiacs, and these zodiacs follow a cycle of 12 years. Each new year represents one of the zodiacs.

In order, they are: Rat/mouse, Ox/cow, Tiger, Rabbit, Dragon, Snake, Horse, Sheep, Monkey, Rooster, Dog, and Pig.

2021 is year of the Ox/Cow - 2020 was year of the Rat/Mouse - 2019 was Year of the Pig... and so on.

Because each zodiac has its own characteristics, they define a year. Chinese zodiac scholars have said in 2021, Year of the Ox, will be a flip-around positive change. They believe this year will be lucky and that it will be a good time to focus on love and relationships. People who are born in years of the Ox are known to have a lot of endurance, be calm and confident, but are also stubborn.

二零二零年
農曆辛丑年
牛

Just like in western culture, these zodiacs are believed to affect personality, fortune, etc, and instead of getting your zodiac by your birth month, you get your zodiac by your birth year. If you are interested in your Chinese zodiac, you can type in your birthday on this calculator and read about it.

What happens during Chinese New Year and how long do you celebrate it for? Lantern Festival?

On average, Chinese New Year is celebrated for about 15-16 days (from about New Year's eve to the first full moon). Preparations start seven days before New Years because stores and restaurants close and people travel to be with their families. Most students are also on their big break during this time - they get off from school around the beginning of january and go back after Chinese New Year. It should also be noted that Northern China and Southern China celebrate the new year differently.

During the preparation period, people go shopping for food and decorations. They also clean the house very well. If living in a different city than one's family, many people will travel back to their hometown to celebrate with family.

During the New Year's Eve period, the house is decorated with New Year's decorations, and there is a reunion dinner with family at the host's house. Out of all the dinners you have during the year, it is incredibly important you don't miss this dinner, which is why there are so many issues with travelling during this time. At this dinner, you eat many lucky foods such as dumplings and fish. Also during this time, the older generations will give younger generations something called 红包, which translates to "red envelope." These envelopes are filled with money and are only given on very special occasions such as new years and weddings. Friends give these to each other, but it is not common at all for a younger generation to give one to an older generation person. There is a custom where families stay up late to "watch over the new year," which is called 守岁. Late at night, people also like to go to temples to hear the first bells of the new year ring because they believe it will drive away bad luck.

On Chinese New Year's Day, fireworks go off, families cook and eat large meals together, sacrifices are made to ancestors, etc. (Fireworks are especially important because they believe it will make your business more successful.) One popular tradition you might know of is the dancing lion/dragon parades where people wear a dragon costume and parade through the city. Dragons are very representative of Chinese culture and are thought to bring luck to a community. Lions are a symbol of protection.

For about a week after the first day, most people go visit family and friends. A lot of times people will visit the other side of their family. For example, someone will spend most of the time with their mother's side of the family during the new year, then during this week, they will go visit relatives of the father's side.

After that week, most people go back to work. This is around day 8-10. Businesses, restaurants, and stores reopen, and many people leave their hometown to go back to jobs in the city.

Day 15, the final day of Chinese New Year, is the Lantern Festival. On this day, the first full moon of the new year happens. To celebrate, people will light more fireworks, revisit family, eat sweet dumplings (called tangyuan), and participate in the Lantern Festival. People release lit lanterns into the sky to honor dead ancestors. This is called 元宵节.

You can read more here.

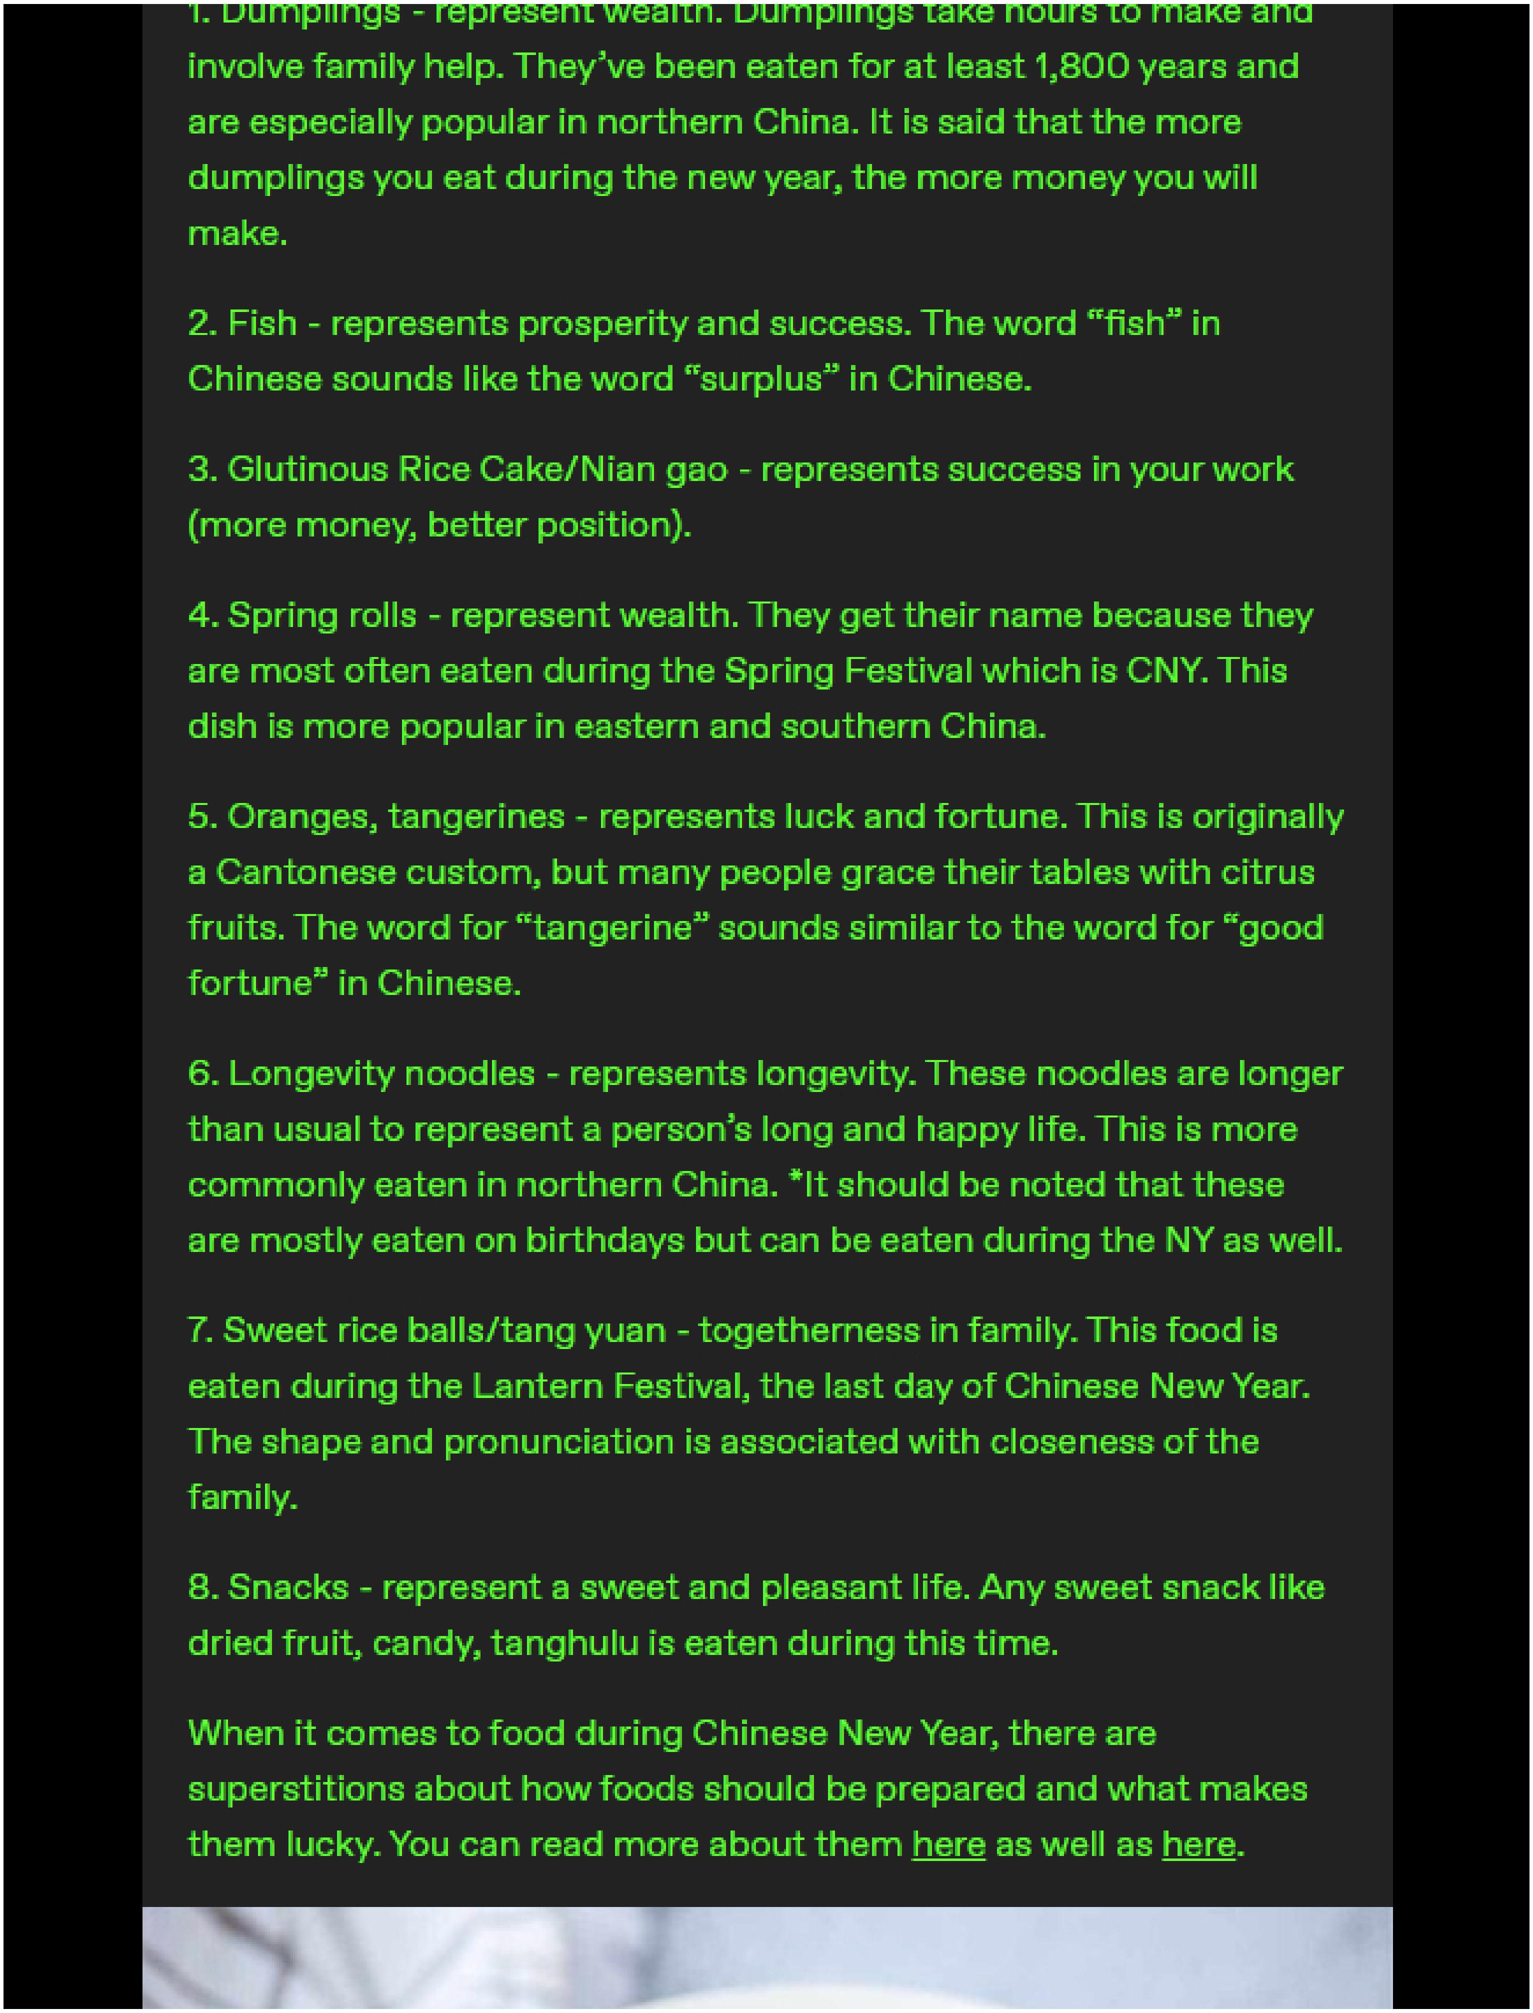
What foods are eaten during Chinese New Year, and what do they represent?

During Chinese New Year, many special foods are eaten, and these are foods that are considered to be lucky and to bring fortune into the new year.



1. Dumplings - represent wealth. Dumplings take hours to make and involve family help. They've been eaten for at least 1,800 years and are especially popular in northern China. It is said that the more dumplings you eat during the new year, the more money you will make.

2. Fish - represents prosperity and success. The word "fish" in Chinese sounds like the word "surplus" in Chinese.

3. Glutinous Rice Cake/Nian gao - represents success in your work (more money, better position).

4. Spring rolls - represent wealth. They get their name because they are most often eaten during the Spring Festival which is CNY. This dish is more popular in eastern and southern China.

5. Oranges, tangerines - represents luck and fortune. This is originally a Cantonese custom, but many people grace their tables with citrus fruits. The word for "tangerine" sounds similar to the word for "good fortune" in Chinese.

6. Longevity noodles - represents longevity. These noodles are longer than usual to represent a person's long and happy life. This is more commonly eaten in northern China. *It should be noted that these are mostly eaten on birthdays but can be eaten during the NY as well.

7. Sweet rice balls/tang yuan - togetherness in family. This food is eaten during the Lantern Festival, the last day of Chinese New Year. The shape and pronunciation is associated with closeness of the family.

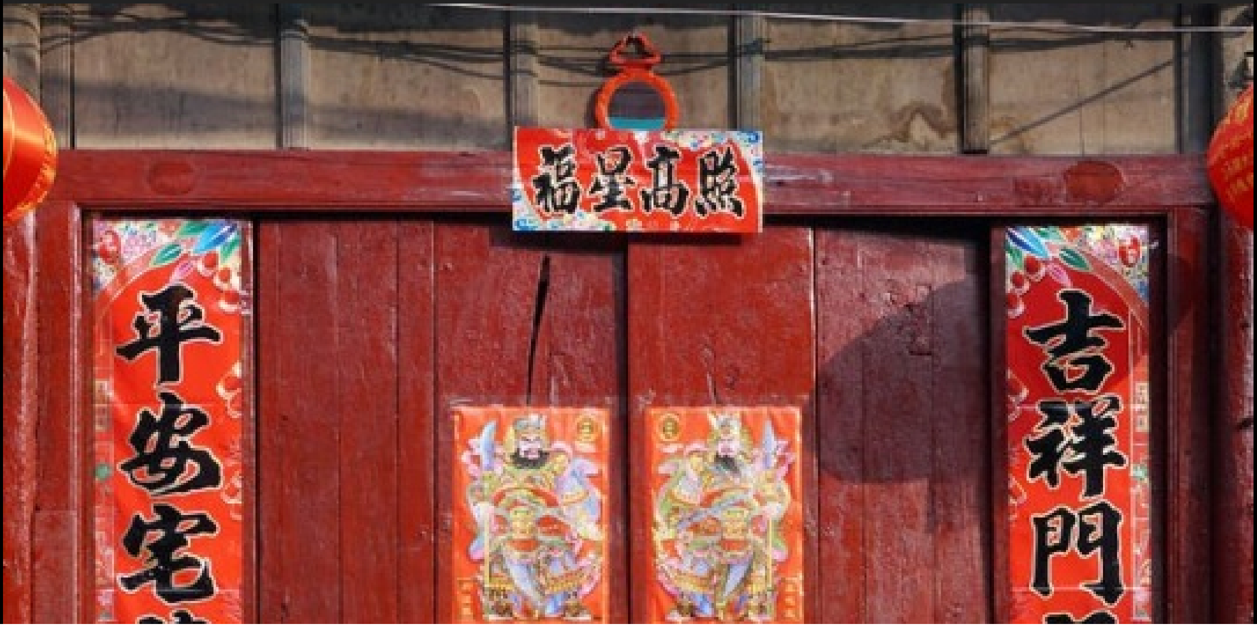
8. Snacks - represent a sweet and pleasant life. Any sweet snack like dried fruit, candy, tanghulu is eaten during this time.

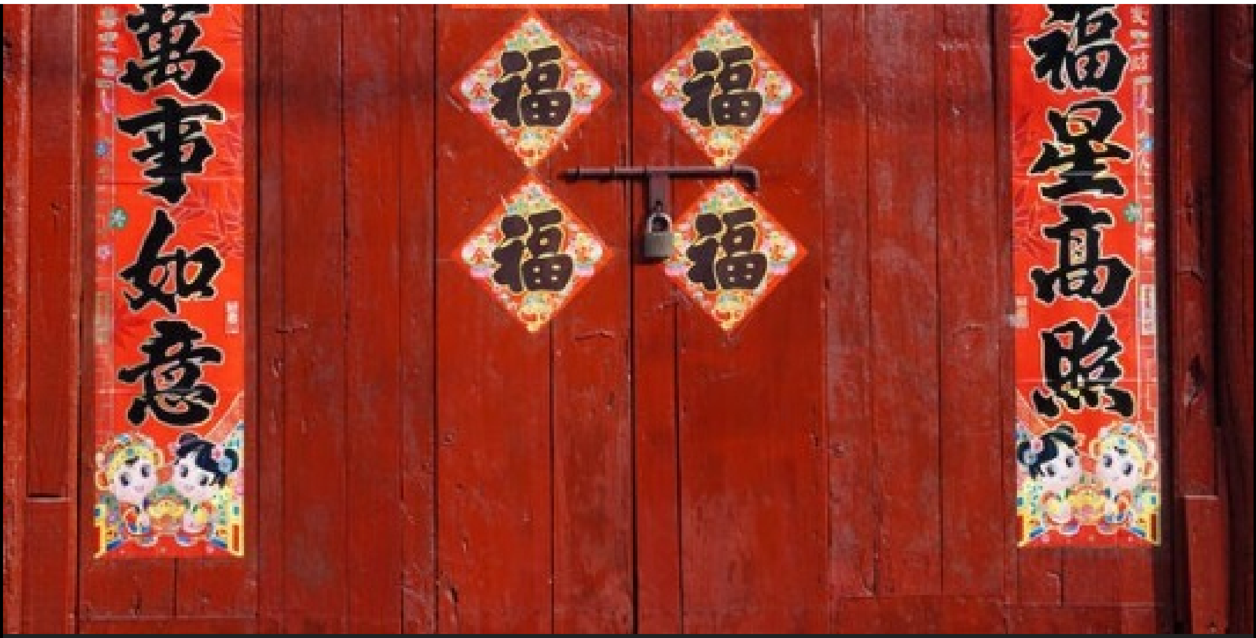
When it comes to food during Chinese New Year, there are superstitions about how foods should be prepared and what makes them lucky. You can read more about them here as well as here.

www.ohmyfoodrecipes.com

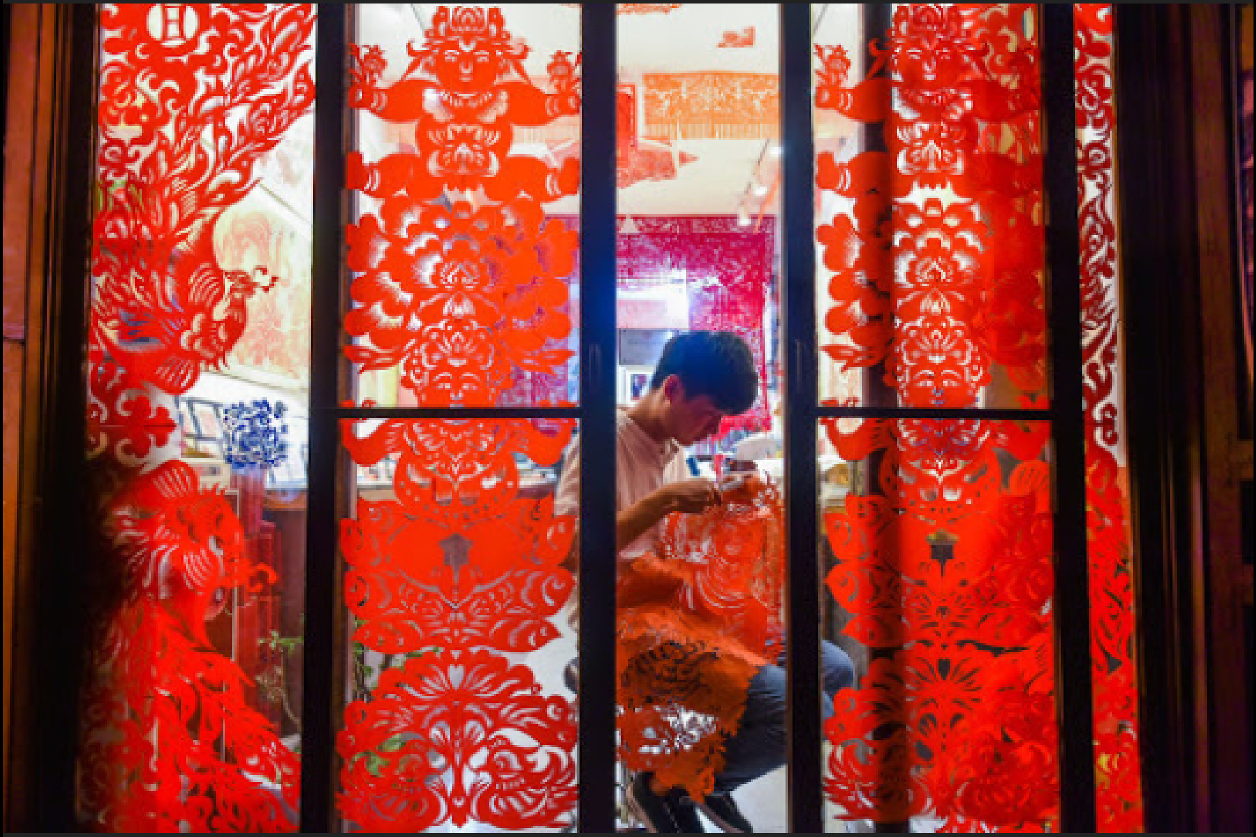
What kinds of decorations are put up in houses during the new year? What do the colors represent?

1. Spring/door couplets - These couplets originated in the Shu era. As seen in the picture below, you post these on doors in couples - in Chinese culture, even numbers are seen as good luck. On many of these couplets are written wishes or poems for the new year. Each couplet should have the same rhythm and the same number of words.





2. Paper cutting - Translated as “window flower,” these intricate, red paper cutting pieces are placed on windows and often represent the zodiac of the new year or other symbolic animals such as fish, dragons, and phoenixes.



3. Upside down characters/Fortune - Many Chinese people during the new year hang up positive characters such as Fu, which means happiness and good fortune. It is written in calligraphy on a red piece of paper and then put upside down on doors and windows. It is hung upside down because the people want the good fortune to fall down onto them.

4. Red lanterns - These lanterns push away bad luck and are seen during both the Spring and Autumn Festival. They can be hung on trees, outside houses, etc. There are also many styles - they can come in many shapes and have symbols written on them.

5. Kumquat trees - As said before, citruses represent good luck and fortune. People place kumquats and citrus fruits on their tables or decorate their homes with small kumquat trees.

You can read more about decorations here as well as here.

Common colors seen during Chinese New Year are red and gold, but green can also be found.

The color red is not only dominate during Chinese New Year, but it is also very representative of Chinese culture as well. Red signifies fire, good fortune, and happiness. It is representative of good luck, keeps the holiday very joyous, and scares away bad spirits.

Gold or yellow is considered to be a very beautiful color. Gold symbolizes wealth, riches, and prosperity.

Green represents money, harmony, and growth.

Though these are the most common colors, it should be noted that a color combination of green and red is considered to be tacky in Chinese culture.

What do people wear during Chinese New Year?

On the first day, it is traditional to wear new clothes and new accessories as it symbolizes new beginnings. However, there are people who like to wear sentimental accessories to respect and remember their ancestors.

Some people like to wear traditional Qipao/Cheongsam, Tang Suits, and Hanfu, but many people stick to western clothes like skirts, dresses, and pants. There is also a tradition of wearing lucky, red underwear for New Years.

Tang suits are the most popular to wear during the New Year, Qipao is also popular, but it is often too cold to wear during the winter months. Many people are starting to wear Hanfu again to celebrate the new year, but it isn't widely accepted yet to wear during the new year.

During the new year, people wear a lot of red and gold. It is important to NOT wear mostly white and/or black. These symbolize death, and white is worn at funerals. Anything that is bright, bold, and upbeat should be fine to wear, but you should go for something that is red.

If you want to wear something that is traditional Chinese for New Years, please make sure you know about cultural appropriation and know how to wear these properly.*

As there is so much information about Chinese New Year, I cannot possibly tell you all about it in one post. It is truly something that you must experience in your lifetime. It is very beautiful, fun, and there are so many things to do and celebrate. I ask you that you please research this more and look at all the beautiful pictures of food, lanterns, fireworks, etc.

Please stay safe and 新年快乐!

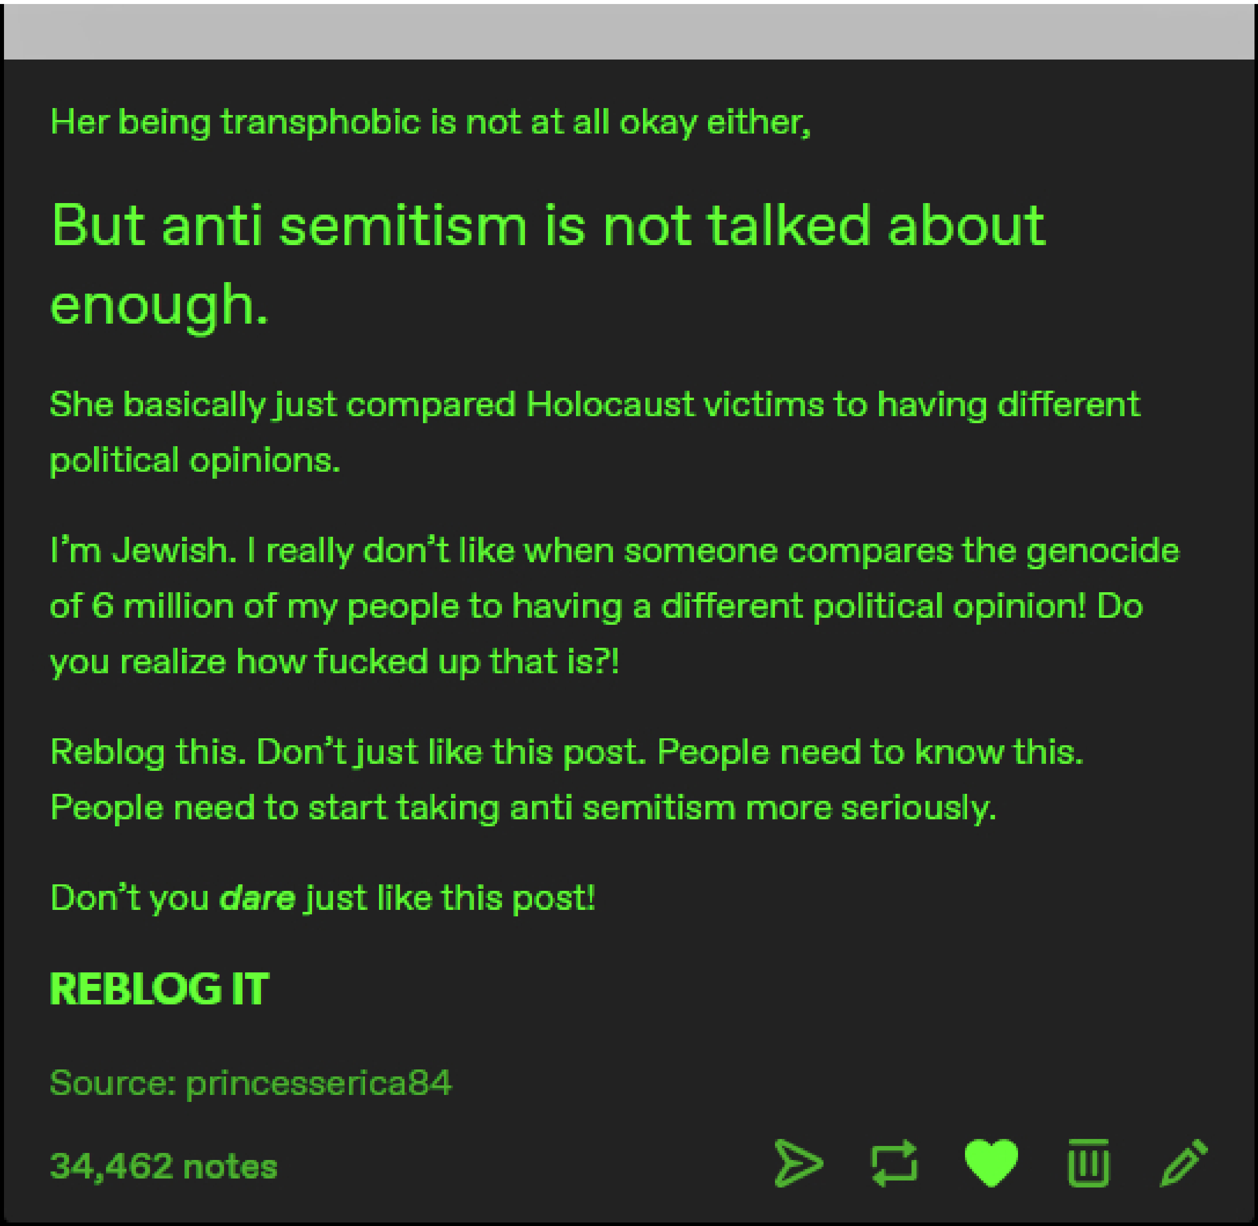
Jews were beaten in the streets, not by Nazi soldiers but by their neighbors...even by children. 😐

"Because history is edited, most people today don't realize that to get to the point where Nazi soldiers could easily round up thousands of Jews, the government first made their own neighbors hate them simply for being Jews. How is that any different from hating someone for their political views?"



Her being transphobic is not at all okay either,

But anti semitism is not talked about enough.

She basically just compared Holocaust victims to having different political opinions.

I'm Jewish. I really don't like when someone compares the genocide of 6 million of my people to having a different political opinion! Do you realize how fucked up that is?!

so, I looked into this, because as an ex-church-kid, this delights me to no end. and, my friends? we have only just begun to pull the thread on this sweater!

this book was originally published on August 14th 2020. as you can see above, Matt Walsh's tweets were from August 21st - but he wasn't the only one to notice this garbage, and he wasn't even the first.

by August 20th, multiple Christian news websites had already taken issue with the book, as you can tell by these hilarious headlines:

SBC's Lifeway Selling "Gen Z Translation" of Bible That Makes a Mockery of God's Word

Lifeway Student Ministry
August 20, 2020 ·

A statement from our team on The Word According to Gen Z devotional:

LifeWay Students' greatest desire is to serve the next generation by introducing them to a lifelong devotion to God's Word. Recently, in partnership with Sunday Cool, the creators of the popular YouTube series with Cool Carll, our team released a 30-day devotional journey called The Word According to Gen Z. This product features a key biblical text (using the ESV), a short lesson from the Scriptures, an application section, and a playful, over-the-top summary of a verse written as a parody of Gen Z lingo. There was no intention at any point of doing a translation of the Bible for Gen Z.

If you've ever been in student ministry, you know that some of the activities you plan don't always bring about the effect you hoped for, and that's what happened in this case. Some people, when they saw this product, assumed that LifeWay decided to translate the Bible in an irreverent manner in order to reach Gen Z. This was not the case. Still, in order to ensure there is no confusion about our reverence for and commitment to the authority and seriousness of the Scriptures, we have decided to no longer publish this product.

"Using a Made-Up Language for a Real Generation" these nerds don't want to admit that they actually thought Gen Z talked like that! what a lack of commitment. they disappoint me.

and the free sample pdf on their website is edited as well! no longer does it say "Cap G" (short for Capital G, by the way - like how Christians spell "God" with a capital G) and "Big J" - now, it just says "God" and "Jesus."

...good thing I'm a veritable internet detective, because I found the original sample pdf, which is just as cringey as it looked! I recommend skimming it if you want, because it's a disaster.

but, now that we know that they edited the book, how will we find out what the rest of the verses were? how ever can we know just how bad it truly was before Christian news sites yelled "blasphemy!" and Lifeway had a collective panic attack?

well, guess what! this devo book came with video lesson tie-ins, and they left their whole website up, for anyone to stumble across!

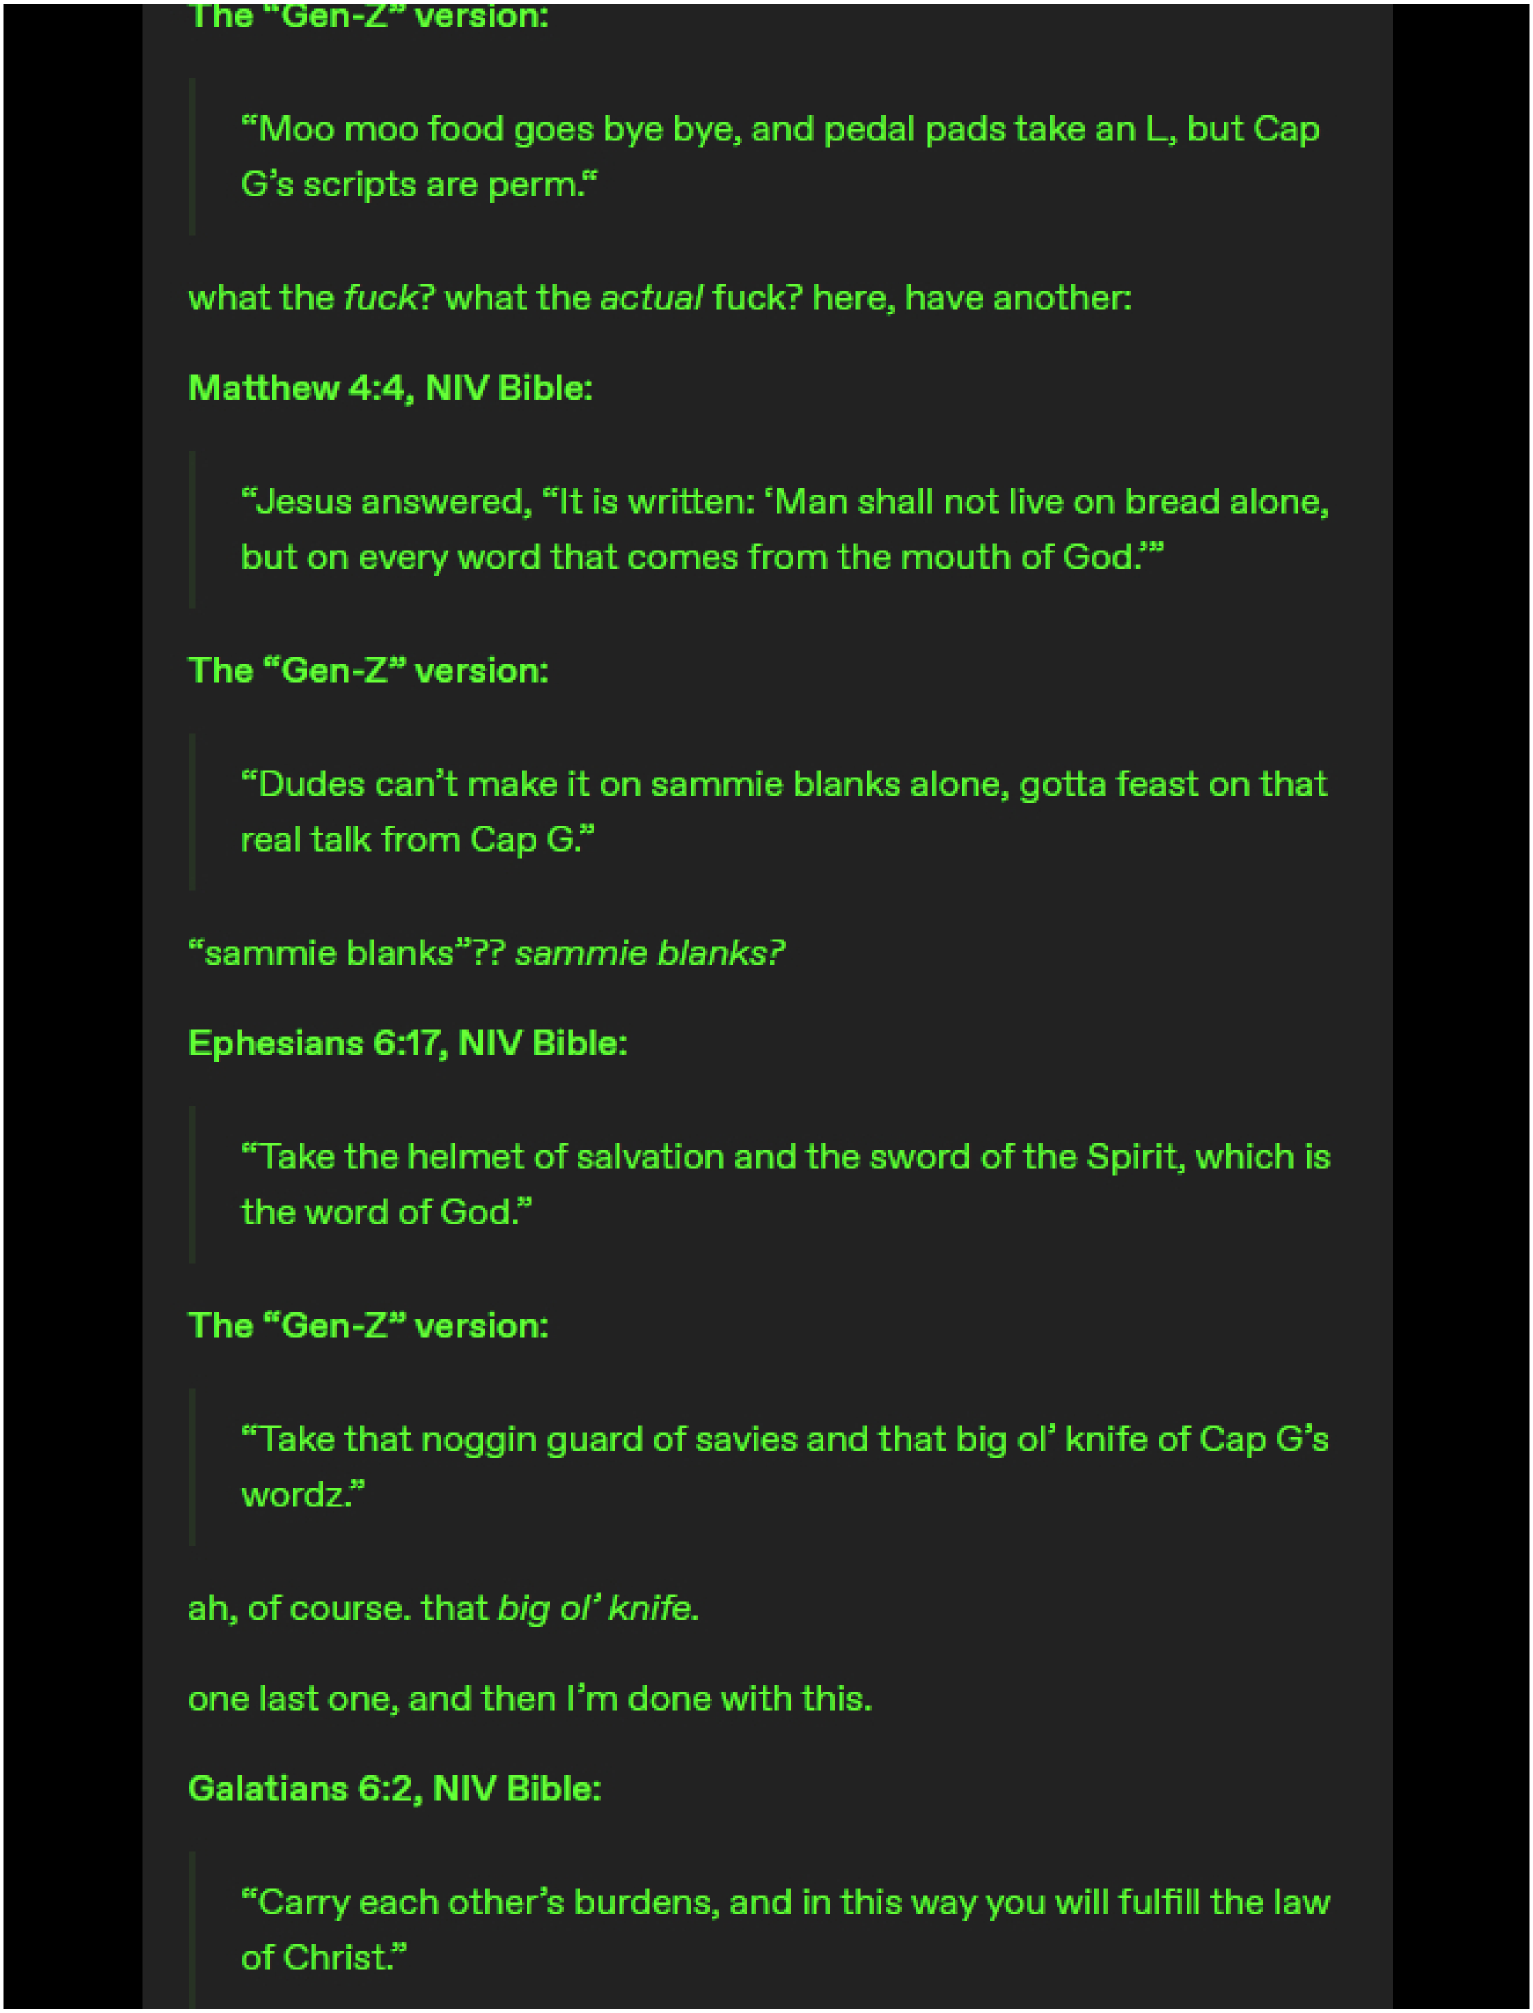
here are a few of the other "translations," next to the original verses, so that you can compare:

Isaiah 40:8, NIV Bible:

> "The grass withers and the flowers fall, but the word of our God endures forever."



The “Gen-Z” version:

> “Moo moo food goes bye bye, and pedal pads take an L, but Cap G’s scripts are perm.“

what the fuck? what the actual fuck? here, have another:

Matthew 4:4, NIV Bible:

> “Jesus answered, “It is written: ‘Man shall not live on bread alone, but on every word that comes from the mouth of God.’”

The “Gen-Z” version:

> “Dudes can’t make it on sammie blanks alone, gotta feast on that real talk from Cap G.”

“sammie blanks”?? sammie blanks?

Ephesians 6:17, NIV Bible:

> “Take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.”

The “Gen-Z” version:

> “Take that noggin guard of savies and that big ol’ knife of Cap G’s wordz.”

ah, of course. that big ol’ knife.

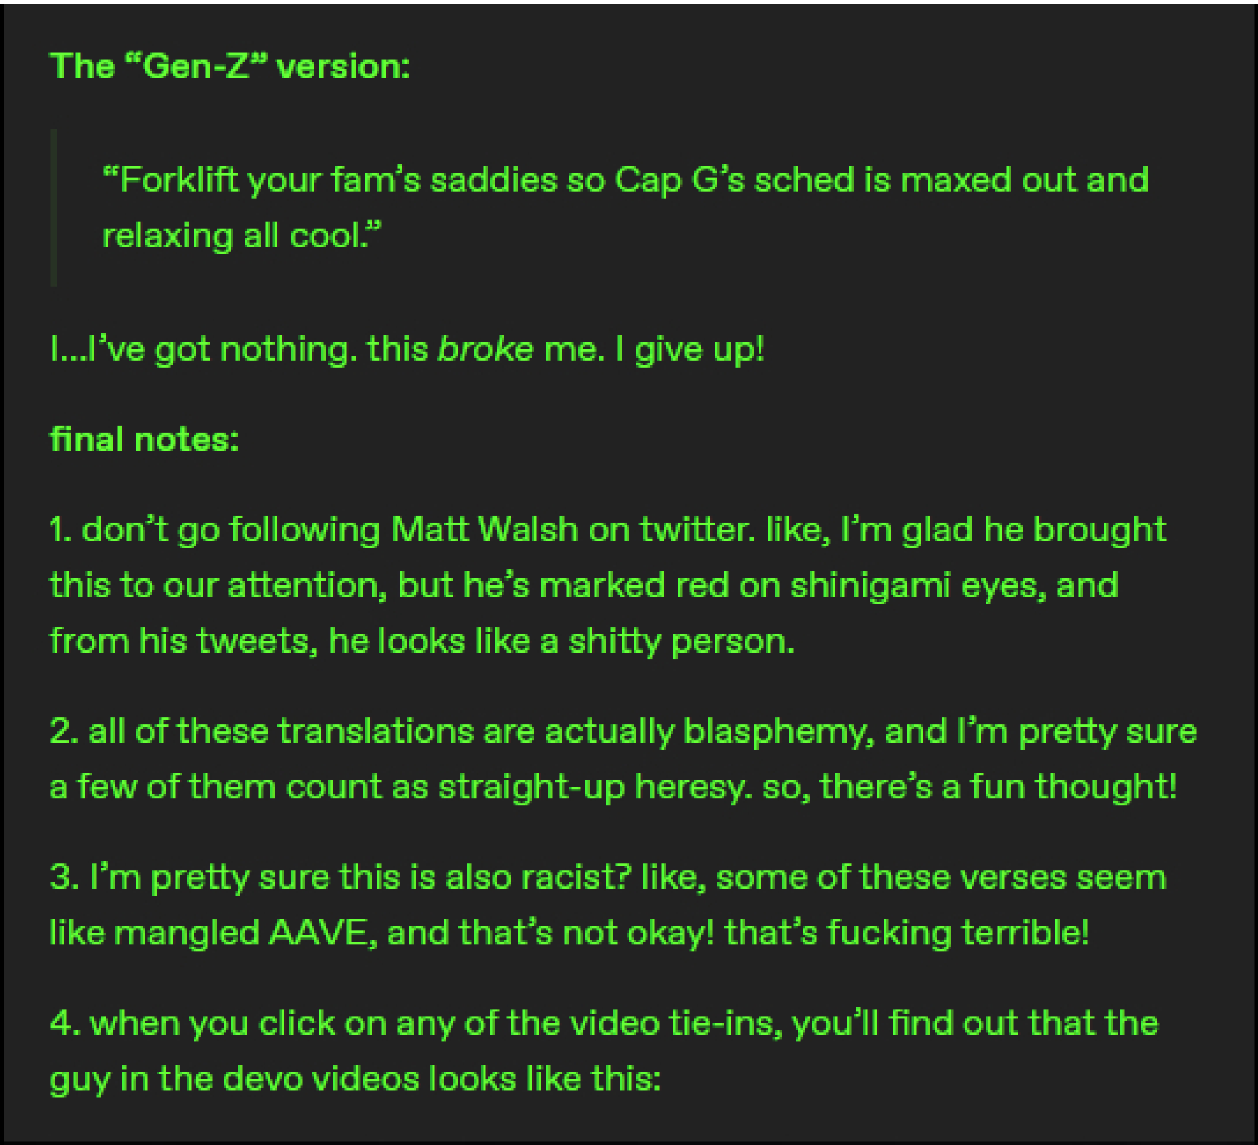
one last one, and then I’m done with this.

Galatians 6:2, NIV Bible:

> “Carry each other’s burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ.”



The "Gen-Z" version:

> "Forklift your fam's saddies so Cap G's sched is maxed out and relaxing all cool."

I…I've got nothing. this broke me. I give up!

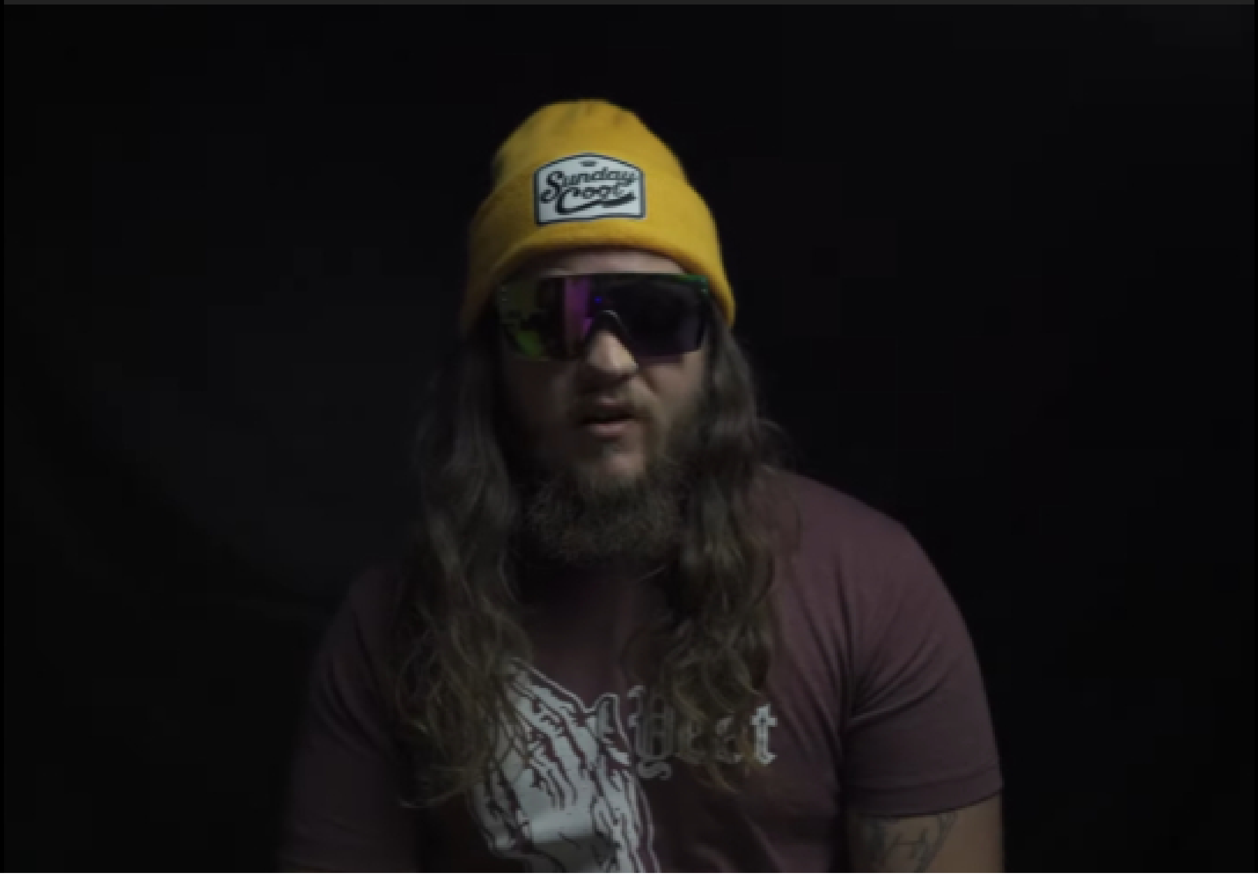
final notes:

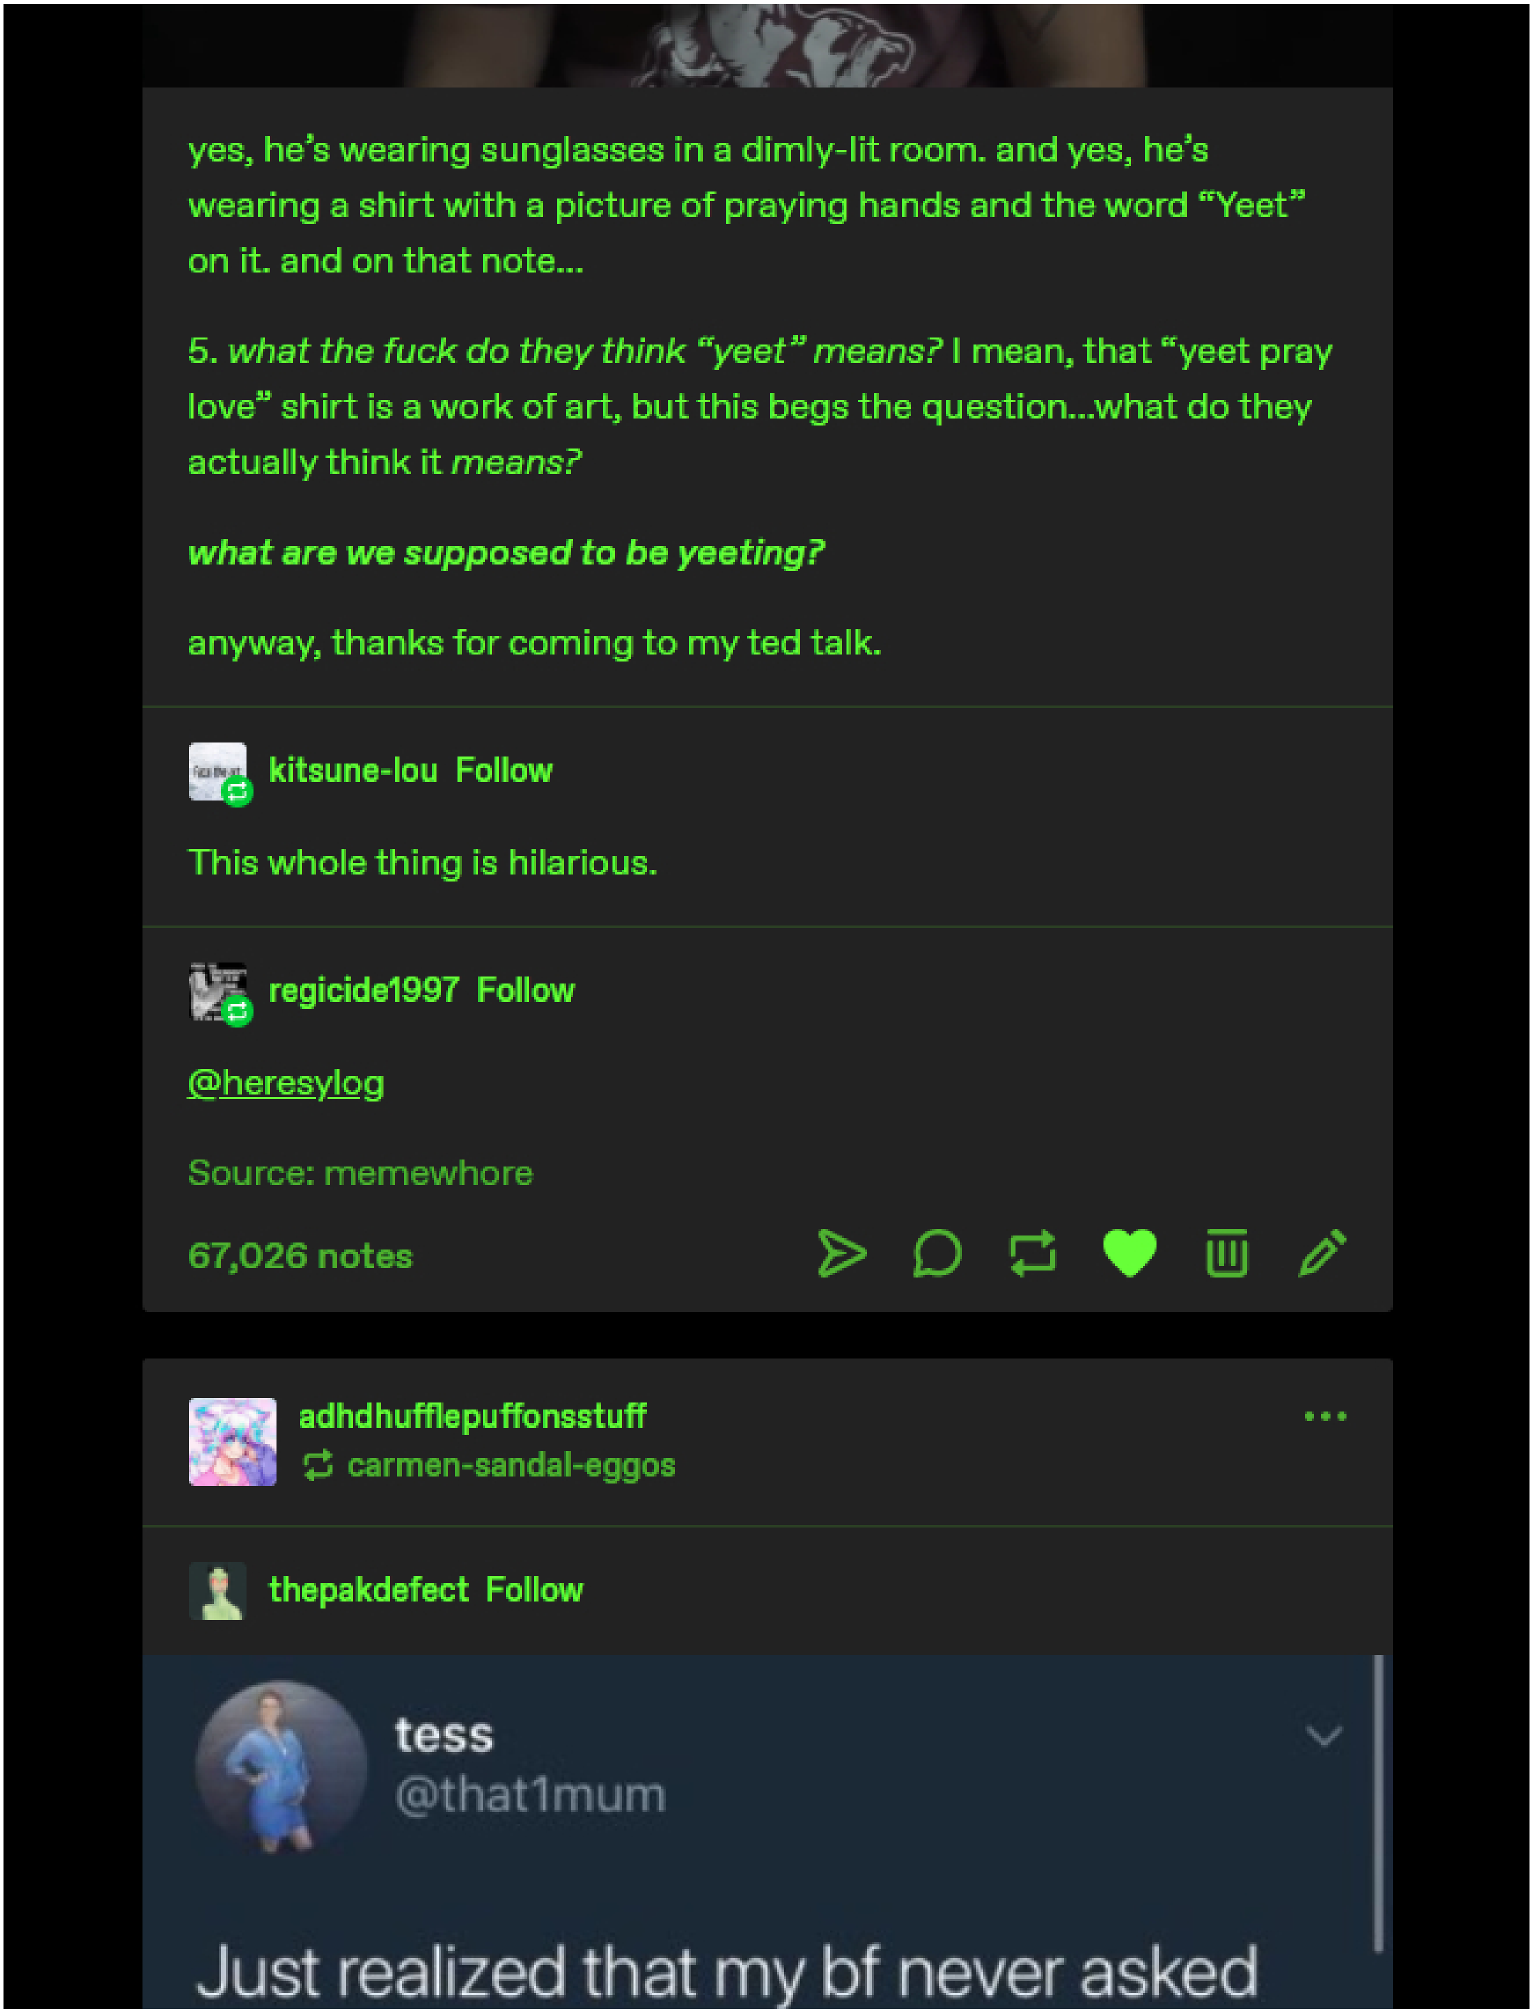
1. don't go following Matt Walsh on twitter. like, I'm glad he brought this to our attention, but he's marked red on shinigami eyes, and from his tweets, he looks like a shitty person.

2. all of these translations are actually blasphemy, and I'm pretty sure a few of them count as straight-up heresy. so, there's a fun thought!

3. I'm pretty sure this is also racist? like, some of these verses seem like mangled AAVE, and that's not okay! that's fucking terrible!

4. when you click on any of the video tie-ins, you'll find out that the guy in the devo videos looks like this:





yes, he's wearing sunglasses in a dimly-lit room. and yes, he's wearing a shirt with a picture of praying hands and the word "Yeet" on it. and on that note...

5. what the fuck do they think "yeet" means? I mean, that "yeet pray love" shirt is a work of art, but this begs the question...what do they actually think it means?

what are we supposed to be yeeting?

anyway, thanks for coming to my ted talk.

anyway that whole family is super manipulative, so let's not pretend that loki is the only one with a few cogs turning in his head odin looked at a baby, and was like "aw shit this'll be useful"... then accidentally loved the baby as a son, instead of as a tool. his resulting freak-out was a great compounding of the combination of Bad Father and Great Planner, and that's... awful. but in general, odin lays on the guilt REAL FUCKING THICK, and he knows how to use guilt and the concept of responsibility + duty to get somebody to do what he wants to do.

thor constantly pretends to be stupider than he is so that he'll get away with more shit. thor continuously and constantly puts on this big bashful grin like "aw, lil old me??? aw honey i don't know a donkey from a horse i can't do nothing to nobody" and then will just level a city in like, three strokes. and this isn't just in ragnarok, where he's really laying the guilt on thick with loki whilst pretending not to know what he's doing or jumping from one fence to the other with bruce and hulk, like, thor is very used to presenting himself as Not A Threat when he fucking is one and then frigga... is also manipulative. shocker! now frigga does it in her capacity as peacemaker. like, that scene where she's all "am i not your mother?" that is a calculated thing to try to make loki admit odin's his father; she's used to using illusions too; and i just fuckin bet that frigga's used similar little guilts and shit to make thor and loki make up now, being this manipulative, like…

i’m not saying it makes these guys bad people, that thor or frigga or even odin are really trying to be like, evil and nasty but what i am saying is that the way loki wields other people’s guilt like a weapon, and the way he hides from genuine emotional intimacy, the way that he is discomfited by frank and open communication…

that’s because all four of them do this. the whole family unit utilises manipulation tactics, weaponised guilt, and the emotions each of them has, to interact with one another. like, this isn’t just a thing of “odin is bad and loki is bad because odin was bad to him”, it’s a whole family unit that thrives on toxic interactions, even when they are made with good intentions

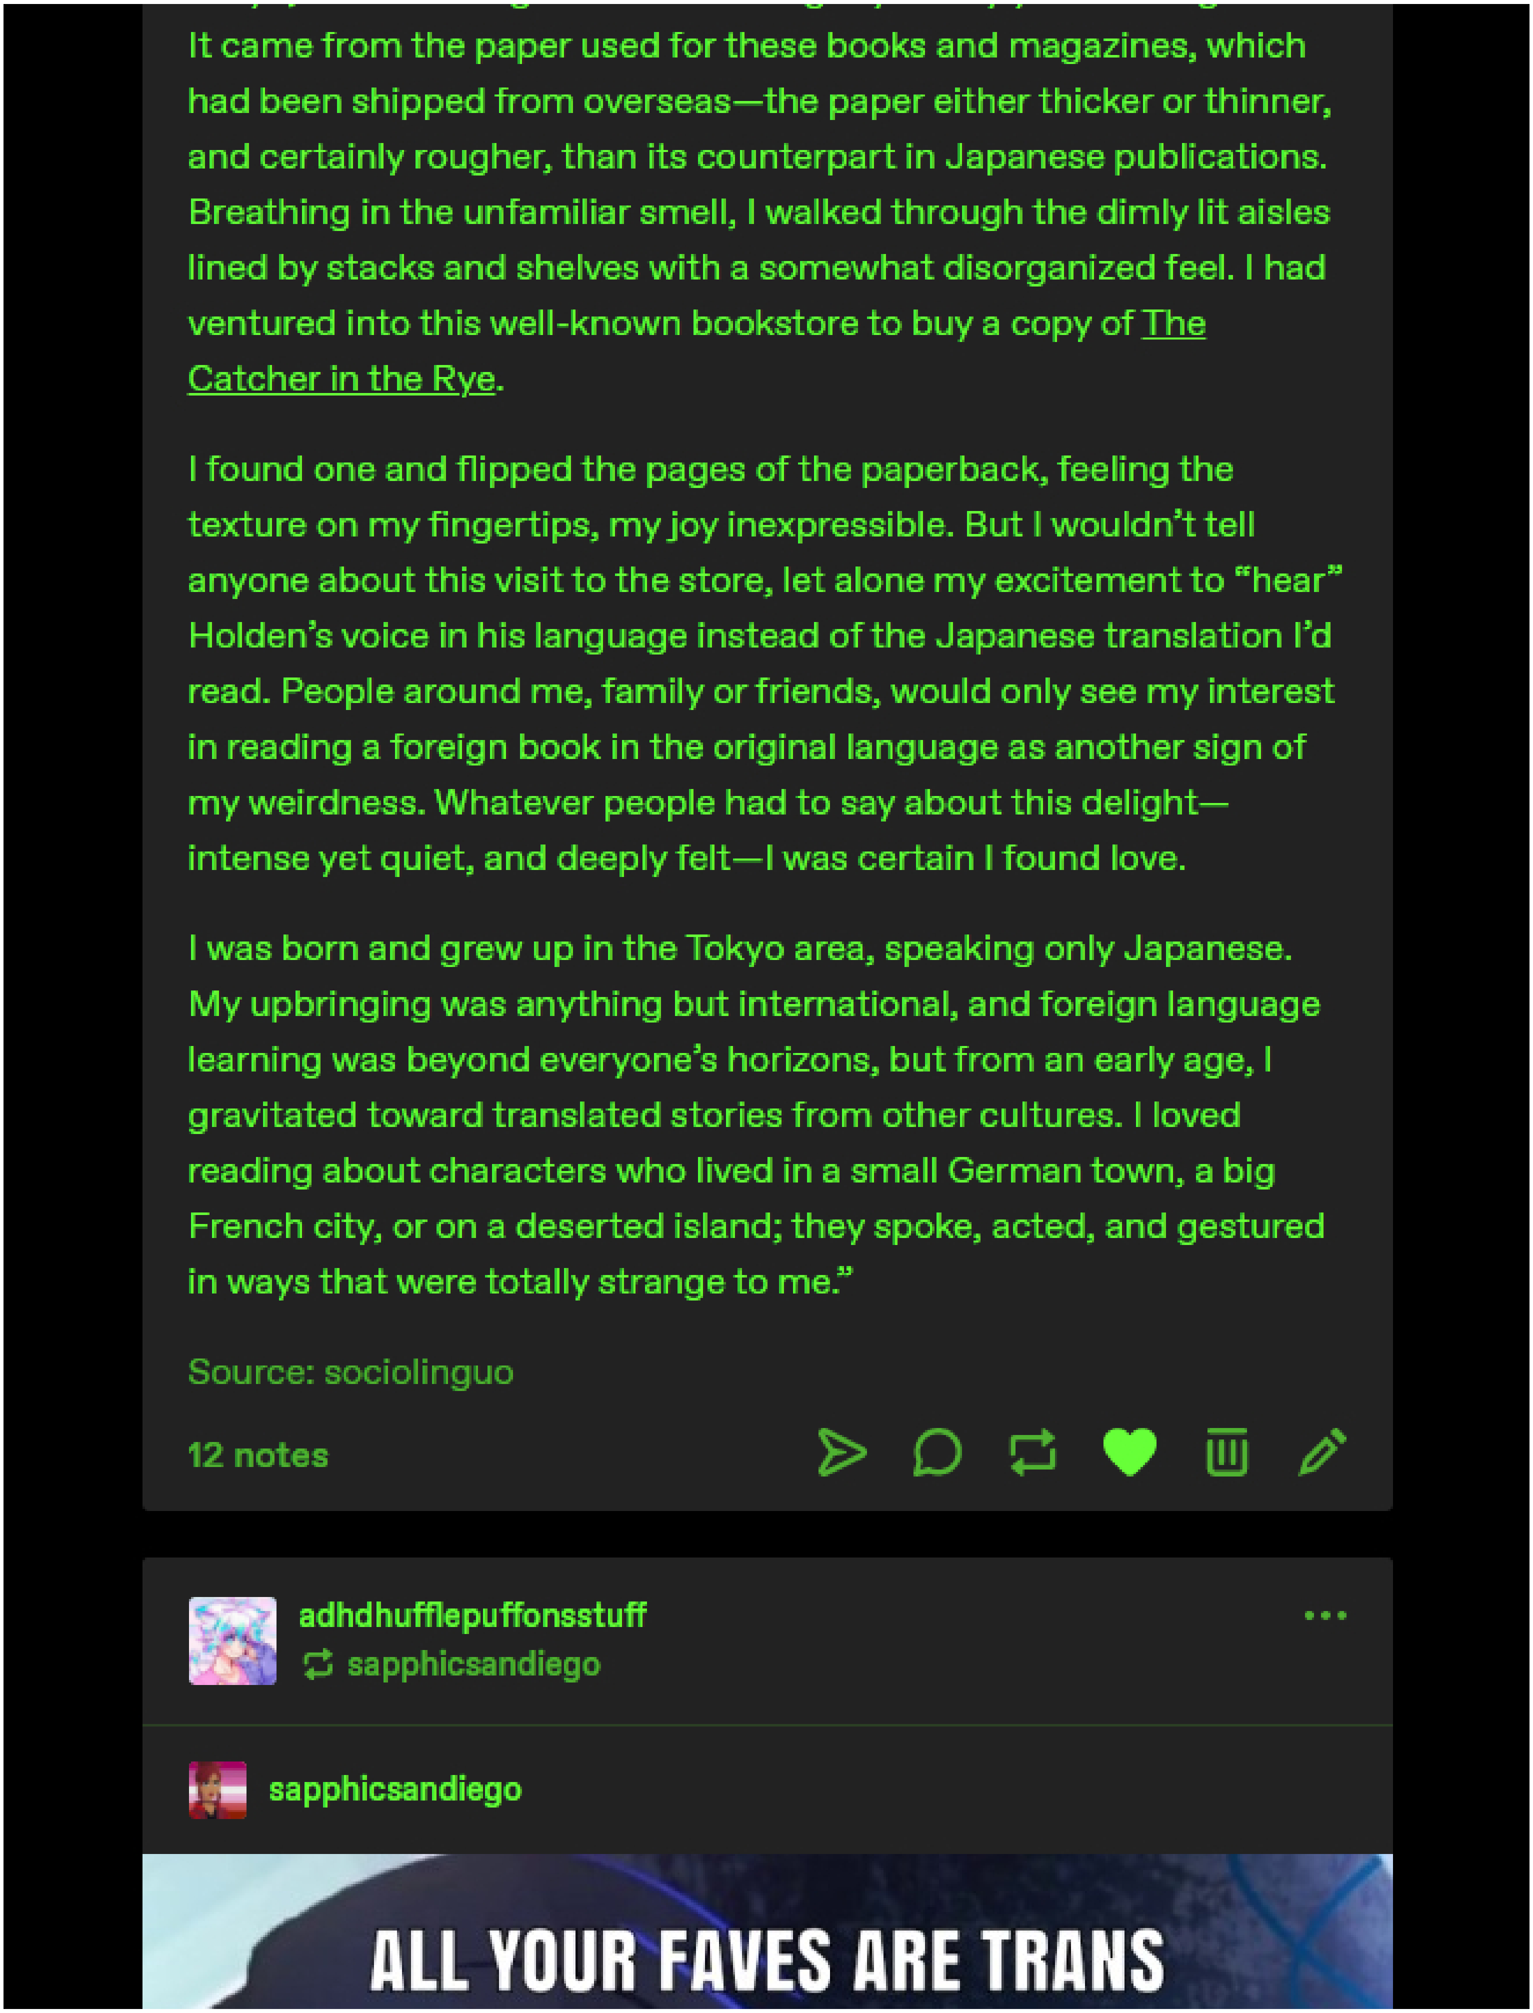
Embracing Imperfection: On Writing in a Second Language

LITHUB.COM

“More than twenty years ago, walking into a foreign bookstore in Tokyo, the first thing I noted was a slightly musty yet soothing scent.



It came from the paper used for these books and magazines, which had been shipped from overseas—the paper either thicker or thinner, and certainly rougher, than its counterpart in Japanese publications. Breathing in the unfamiliar smell, I walked through the dimly lit aisles lined by stacks and shelves with a somewhat disorganized feel. I had ventured into this well-known bookstore to buy a copy of The Catcher in the Rye.

I found one and flipped the pages of the paperback, feeling the texture on my fingertips, my joy inexpressible. But I wouldn't tell anyone about this visit to the store, let alone my excitement to "hear" Holden's voice in his language instead of the Japanese translation I'd read. People around me, family or friends, would only see my interest in reading a foreign book in the original language as another sign of my weirdness. Whatever people had to say about this delight—intense yet quiet, and deeply felt—I was certain I found love.

I was born and grew up in the Tokyo area, speaking only Japanese. My upbringing was anything but international, and foreign language learning was beyond everyone's horizons, but from an early age, I gravitated toward translated stories from other cultures. I loved reading about characters who lived in a small German town, a big French city, or on a deserted island; they spoke, acted, and gestured in ways that were totally strange to me."

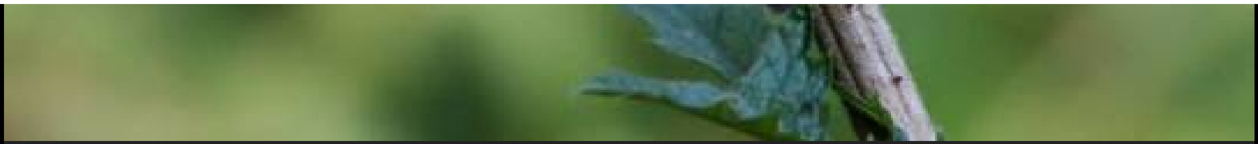
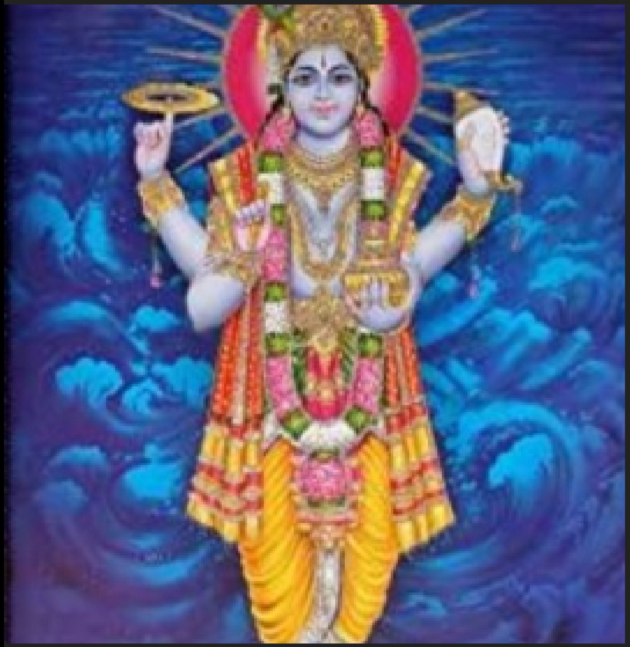
Ageing Is A Natural Process



According to Vishnu Purana (as per Hindu mythology), Devas (gods) and Asuras (devils) jointly churned the Kshirabdhi (milky ocean), wherefrom emerged Dhanvantari (god of medicine) with the Amruta Kumbha (a pot of nectar). There was a big fight between the two to get this pot to seek immortality, but ultimately Devas got it, and they became immortal.

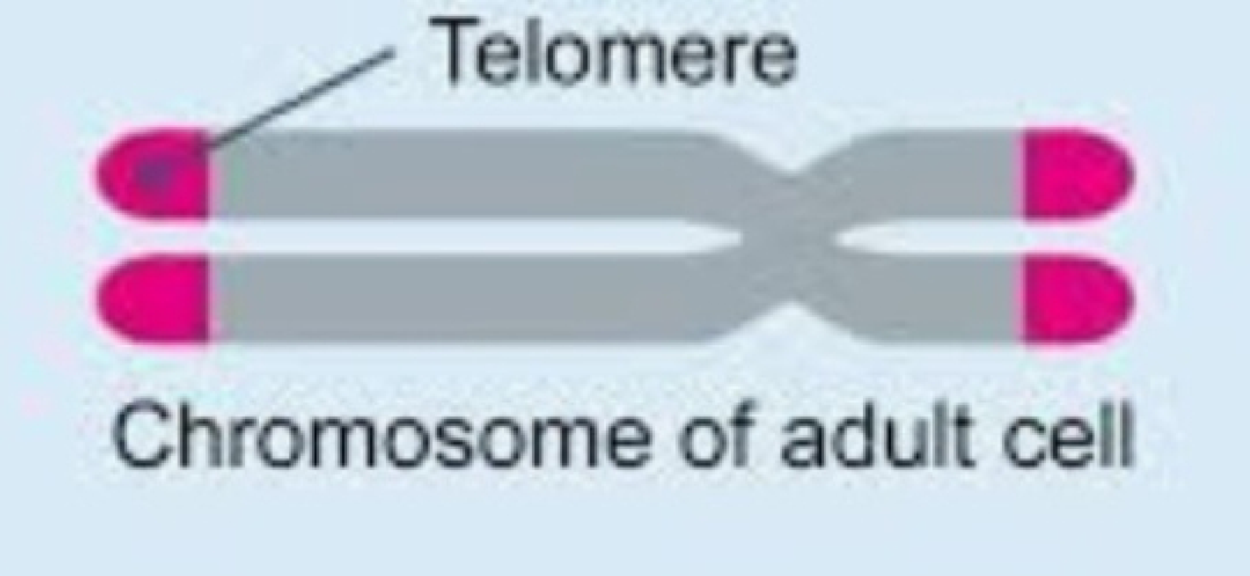


I wonder if such a potion is made available to common people, even at a cost, nobody will die. The fear of old age and death always haunted the mankind. The desire to live long and to remain young has been in the minds of human beings since time immemorial.

There are so many legends and myths about immortality and everlasting life in almost all the civilisations. It is believed that the process of ageing can be halted by reversing the biological clock.

But the question remains what causes ageing.

Our cells or building blocks have 23 pairs of chromosomes that are made up of coils of DNA. These chromosomes have protective caps at both ends called telomeres that protect DNA from disintegration during the process of cell division.



With each division, these protective caps of telomere get shortened due to loss of a small amount of DNA and eventually after 40–60 divisions, these caps disappear. As a result, the cells stop dividing, and the old cells are not replaced by new ones. This gives rise to loss of immunity and old age creeps in.

These telomeres seem to be the key. Telomores in turtles (average age over 100 years) are extremely large compared to humans, and very small in mice (average age 2 to 3 years).

So the question arises whether the length of these telomeres can be increased. The answer is yes, with the help of an enzyme called 'telomerase' that enables cells to divide without any harm to telomeres.

This was discovered by Elizabeth Blackburn, Carol Greidner and Jack Szostak who shared the 2009 Nobel Prize in medicine. Further genetic research on the issue to reverse cells to the youthful state by resetting the epigenome is going on unabated.

And the possibilities of having an elixir of youth are getting stronger, courtesy our scientists.

But what then? Suppose, human beings with geneticodifications become immortal, what will be the consequences? Is it desirable? Just imagine.

People now get quickly bored with old parents. How will they cope with? The generation gap will be much more pronounced. The concept of joint family had already been discarded. Now even nuclear families are also crumbling.

There will be more old age homes than normal ones. What will be the role of the elderly in society then? Will they be able to perform as efficiently and effectively as ever?

What will be the age of retirement? What will be the employment scenario for younger population? Will it not be necessary to put a complete halt on population growth?

The questions are many that cannot be answered, or even anticipated.

All plants and creatures have a life, long or short, but all have to come one day and to go some other day. This is destiny, this is the nature. Any attempt to interfere with the process has met with revulsion from the nature.

If other things around us constantly change, how can and why should we continue to remain intact? Will it not create an imbalance, a mismatch? Change is a natural process, it's inevitable.

It is better not to encroach upon the nature. What is required is to lead a normal healthy life by following a strict regimen of meditation, right type of food and good lifestyle, as suggested by Dr Deepak Chopra, an alternative medicine advocate.

Did she just tell an alligator what to do? 😳

ordinaryredtail Follow

This is one of those things that looks cool and funny but it's really not. Granted, I don't work with large reptiles. But I do work with large dangerous animals. You don't turn your back on a creature like this, especially when they know it's feeding time. it doesn't matter if they were raised in captivity or not. They're still wild animals, and can bite and attack, even if they aren't meaning to hurt you specifically. There should always be separation between the keeper and an animal that could rip your arm clean off. Those tongs also don't look long or sturdy enough, but again, not a large reptile expert.

gaelicfalcon Follow

I have even more bad news. I looked up this facility, and shockingly it's not AZA accredited /s. It also appears to be a fancy roadside zoo, as it offers all sorts of hilariously dangerous excursions where you can hold and pet reptiles and amphibians. They started as an exotic pet store and changed their name to make people think they are a legitimate educational facility, but even on their own website they have pictures of their employees and guests holding gators and komodo dragons. Don't follow them on Tiktok or give them money; they are not caring for these animals responsibly and admit to breeding “world’s first” animals which means they are not even trying to support legitimate conservation efforts.

ordinaryredtail Follow

Yeah, this is honestly what I expected.

kaijutegu Follow

Just a heads up- they’re not holding Komodo dragons. Those are water monitors. The distinction is REALLY important because until a couple years ago, Komodos in the US were under the strict purview of the AZA. Nobody outside the AZA had one, despite everybody wanting one. Now that’s changed. There’s one Komodo outside the AZA. She had to be spayed due to life-threatening egg binding (so she couldn’t be used for the species survival plan) and she’s in an amazing educational facility just outside of Chicago, but that did set a precedent for Komodos being scrubbed out of AZA programs and placed in non-AZA facilities.

And the less reputable places absolutely know this and they are salivating over the prospect. Komodo dragons are pretty much the one reptile there isn’t a black market for in the US. The export and breeding is too tightly controlled, and they’re too well-known to slip under the radar. But places like this do want you to think they could have a Komodo dragon. They want to be seen as an actual conservation effort- they want the court of public opinion to be swayed towards them. So it’s important to be aware that nowhere (unless it’s the Wildlife Discovery Center in IL or an AZA facility) in the US has a Komodo. It’s important to know what you’re looking at, because places like this do not need to have Komodo dragons, and the public assuming they do/should is potentially dangerous for the species.

Although… I do think it’s kinda funny that despite being an “educational facility” people walk away from their website thinking they have an animal they actually do not. Kinda shows they’re not really on messaging target, doesn't it.

Secondly, I am a large reptile expert and my conclusion here is the same as the non-experts (because the folks who have chimed in have eyes): this is incredibly dangerous do not try this at home. You should never be that close to an untaped alligator's mouth. If the mouth is banded, that's one thing, but that animal could easily have taken her face off. She already has it keyed up with a feeding response, and she's using the stimulus (feeding tongs) to put physical pressure on the animal while trying to direct it to something other than a feed. Alligators are really easily trainable. Once they get a stimulus or target in their head, it is in there to STAY. Redirecting with the feeding target is dangerous because when the alligator sees that, the only thing going through its head is "FOOD. NOW." This is really irresponsible!

I also want to point out that handling reptiles isn't necessarily a bad thing. It's one of those experiences that can be done really well or really poorly. I'm actually a pretty big proponent of reptile meet 'n' greets because they get the public interacting with stigmatized animals in a positive light. This is especially true for snakes in general and reptiles native to a place- we need people to understand how important they are for the ecosystems in which they evolved. Getting up close and personal and doing some light handling is a really good way to help people learn and love. But you have to do it sensibly. It's never a good idea to do that with amphibians; they're far too delicate. Alligators- specifically young ones- are honestly a-ok to do this with, if it's done correctly and with the animal's comfort in mind. The mouths must be banded (this does not hurt them) and they need to be able to have space for heat and seclusion. There are plenty of places that will let you hold alligators. It's not by default a bad thing. But if the mouths aren't banded, that shows they don't care about the animal's safety or yours.
